Greenhouse Heating.HEATING SMALL PLACES.

In a previous installment, published April 18, various phases of hot water systems for heating greenhouses were discussed. The hot water method is so much to be commended for small places that we will take up the consideration of some of the other points:

Expansion Tank.

The expansion tank connected with such a system is located over the boiler above the highest point in the system. This tank is connected by a pipe to the return main and also to the water supply. It is equipped with a glass water column and an overflow pipe leading to some outside drainage. The object of this expansion tank is to prevent the waste of water by overflow, and hence to save fuel and hot water. In apparatus of this description water heated, say from 40 to 212 degrees will expand about one-twentieth of its volume, and unless an open expansion tank is provided the waste through overflow will be considerable.

Good Greenhouse Heater.

A good, effective boiler for greenhouse work should have a coal area of about fifty per cent larger than that of the grates, which is essential for maintaining a proper temperature during the cold winter nights. Anything short of this amount of space may cause trouble at critical moments. The firebox should be unusually deep to provide ample space for good combustion of the gases, and the fire channels over the fireboxes to the boilers should incline toward the fire, so as to direct the heat directly against the boiler surface. The concentration of the fire in a series of currents thus produces more force than if scattered.

The firebox should properly be connected with the smoke pipe so that no smoking or back-draft can follow. By means of a wide U-shaped flue extending a considerable distance parallel with the boiler a good part of the escaping heat is utilized in heating the water.

The grates should be of ample size and designed to receive and hold a good bed of coals, and when cleaned be sim-

GENTLEMEN:—You can strongly and unhesitatingly recommend the "Eclipse" piston type reducing valve to florists. We have two purchased of you last year. FLORENCE HEATERS

When most push nipple boilers need repairing, you have to take the whole boiler apart; you do not have to do this with the Florence Heater, as each section forms its own base. This does away with the "separate base," and enables you in making a repair to take out any one section desired, and simply draw the boiler together again, with but a slight loss of time and almost no trouble.

Another feature of the Florence is that it is so conservatively rated that the difference in the capacity of the boiler when running under this condition would scarcely be noticeable, enabling you to get along until repairs arrive.

As a matter of fact, Florence Heaters, on account of their superior construction, are not ordinarily subject to strains in the weakest point, which break so many heaters; consequently purchasers are relieved of the great expense for repairs so common with most of the present-day heaters.

ple of operation. The loosening and discharging of clinkers without any great skill is an important consideration. Without properly designed grates the heater never will give satisfaction, and all the improvements made in other parts of the plant will be nullified.

What Makes Circulation.

The application of the principle of hot water circulation to greenhouse heating is due to its adaptability. In installing such a plant it must be remembered that it is gravity which produces the circulation of the water through the system. It is the difference in the weight between ascending and descending columns of water in the perpendicular flow and return pipes. With water at its greatest density at 39 degrees Fahrenheit, the volume increases and the density decreases as the boiler heats it. This means that the heated water becomes lighter. As it becomes heated and lighter in the boiler through expansion it is forced through the boiler outlet and flow-pipes to the radiating coils by the colder water descending through the return pipes. The water as it makes its journey imparts its heat to the surrounding atmosphere and grows heavier in weight and density. By the time it reaches the boiler again it is sufficiently cool and heavy to force the lighter water up through the same circulation.

To secure the most desirable results with such a system, the pipes and mains should be laid out with as few sharp inclines as possible, and the outlet should be of ample size and placed at the highest point of the boiler. This insures free and rapid circulation with the minimum of friction. The economy of operation of such a heating plant depends upon the comparatively free and easy circulation of the water through the system, and anything that causes friction means an increase in the coal bills.—A. S. Atkinson, in the National Builder.

VITIS HARRYANA.

Vitis Harryana will prove one of the most useful plants of recent introduction, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. I am not quite sure of the botanical distinction, but I think if it had been named ampelopsis it would have been more descriptive of its general habit, for it so closely resembles Ampelopsis quinquefolia that it might be taken as a variegated variety of that useful old plant. I was in doubt of its hardiness, but I have found that plants standing outside when there has been over 10 degrees of frost have not suffered. I may add that these were in pots, and I have frequently found that those in the ground will live while those in pots will be killed by frost; this, of course, does not refer to the above, but to many other Japanese and North Indian plants, and some of our hardiest plants will be killed if the roots get frozen up in pots.

HUNT'S WISE WORDS

Guaranteed Fertilizers Our Fertilizers are prepared especially for Florists' use and are analyzed by an expert chemist to see that they are free from all acids. You can depend upon their being just what you want, AND SAFE. You ought to have these on hand at all times, ready for use.

The brand we are selling has no superior. It is an absolutely uniform grade of pure bone, guaranteed free from acids, and is sold at as low rates as many inferior brands, which cannot be used with safety in greenhouse work.

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. The raw material for Hunt's Sheep Manure is the droppings taken from solid floor sheep corrals. Ordinary manures are largely shoveled up from the ground and contain a large proportion of soil for which you pay, but from which you get nothing except possibly weed seed. lar flow and return pipes. With water of its greatest density at 39 degrees Fahrenheit, the volume increases and the density decreases as the boiler heats it. This means that the heated water becomes lighter. As it becomes heated and lighter in the boiler through expansion it is forced through the boiler outlet and flow-pipes to the radiating coils of the colder water descending through the return pipes. The water as it makes its journey imparts its heat to the surrounding atmosphere and grows heavier weight and density. By the time it reaches the boiler again it is sufficiently cold and heavy to force the lighter water up through the same circulation. To secure the most desirable results in such a system, the pipes and mains could be laid out with as few sharp lines as possible, and the outlet could be of ample size and placed at the highest point of the boiler. This insures free and rapid circulation with a minimum of friction. The economy of operation of such a heating plant depends upon the comparatively free and easy circulation of the water through the system, and anything that causes restriction means an increase in the coal bills.—A. S. Atkinson, in the National Builder.

VITIS HARRYANA.

Vitis Harryana will prove one of the most useful plants of recent introduction, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. I am not quite sure of the botanical distinction, but I think if it had been named ampelopsis it would have been more descriptive of its general habit, for it so closely resembles Ampelopsis quinquefolia that it might be taken as a variegated variety of that useful old plant. I was in doubt of its hardiness, but I have found that plants standing outside when there has been over 10 degrees of frost have not suffered. I may add that these were in pots, and I have frequently found that those in the ground will live while those in pots will be killed by frost; this, of course, does not refer to the above, but to many other Japanese and North Indian plants, and some of our hardiest plants will be killed if the roots get frozen up in pots.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Dan Murphy, of the Doyle Greenhouses, Cambridge, Mass., says two of the best sellers at Easter were Clerodendron Balfouri and Bougainvillea Sanderiana. It is strange that these showy plants are not more largely grown, for they sell at sight, and the demand for pot plants being on the increase, one cannot get too large a variety of salable kinds.

Fred Vetter, at the Hoffman place, at Cambridge, showed the writer a grand batch of cyclamens in 3-inch pots, seed sown last August. For the last two seasons his plants have been prize-winners at the spring show at Boston, causing much favorable comment. It proves his argument in favor of early sowing. When last visiting this place I reported a species of stem-rot in Easter lilies. Strange to say, it appeared in a few only, the remainder being perfectly healthy, and the crop came in just at Easter.

J. M. Ward, of Peabody, Mass., and I paid a visit to Welch Bros., Boston, and were piloted by the worthy Patrick Welch through this up-to-date establishment and the order and system appealed to me as most commendable. First impressions are great, and one of the most necessary essentials today in our business is system.

The popularity of the azalea seems to be as strong as ever. W. W. Edgar, of Waverly, Mass., had grand specimens for Easter and every one sold. There is a demand for plants of pyramidal form, which are never abundant.

The Sunday closing law is being strictly enforced in Boston. I noticed the auto of Thomas Galvin out making a special delivery on Sunday morning, but it almost requires a permit to be allowed to look in the store windows of the Hub just now, so strict are the blue laws. Bayersdorfer landed here today and has secured three sample rooms at the Quincy House to accommodate the immense line of samples. W. M.

TWIN CITIES.The Market.

The weather has been favorable to the growers, but not the best for the retailers, as we have had a cold north wind blowing and customers preferred to remain indoors. Saturday it warmed up nicely and, as the rose market has been glutted all week, a great many cheap sales were on. About every dealer had signs on his window offering roses at 50 cents per dozen. The street dealers also were much in evidence, and the department stores were offering special inducements. Carnations are not any too plentiful and on that account prices have kept up. Funeral work has been heavy, the city demand being especially strong.

Minneapolis.

Ralph Latham has had a good business all week. The sales on roses by different concerns induced him to lower prices to some extent, but he obtained fair prices on everything.

Amundson & Kerschner turned over considerable stock all week. Saturday the demand was especially strong and the results for the week they report as being very satisfactory.

Will & Son are cutting some fine Richmond, Bride and Maid. Their carnations are also good and find a ready market.

Sunday morning trade seems to cut quite a figure with practically all the stores.

St. Paul.

The Ramaley Floral Co. has something new and simple in the way of a wire loop on which to make sprays. With it a great many ferns are saved and it is much easier to make a shapely spray.

C. F. Vogt had a banner week, the demand being confined to funeral designs. Trade since Easter, he says, has kept up well.

Robert C. Seegar has filed a petition in bankruptcy, scheduling assets of $175 and liabilities of $2,352.34.

L. L. May & Co. have had a heavy week. Funeral designs were the main issue.

An Argument Is No Good

if the other fellow doesn't believe a word you say. Talk is cheap—as the old saying goes—and it's just about true when it comes to greenhouse material. Every firm says they have the best and that their material is the only kind to use—that if you use the other fellow's goods you'll be sorry, for he doesn't know anything about making greenhouses. The other fellow comes back and says everybody else makes shade traps but him, that they are in the lumber business and never knew how to build a greenhouse. How much of all this talk do you believe? Talk IS cheap, but we've got more successful florists and growers behind our statements than any other firm—they are satisfied customers too.

We not only believe in advertising in this paper, but believe in advertising with our goods—the quality of our material sells it.

WE Believe Thoroughly That to say to you that "Our Greenhouse Material is the Best," and the "Only Kind Used By The Best Florists," doesn't prove anything. The fact is that such a statement only goes to prove that it is like every other firm's material and certainly that's no proof for your buying it. Now, when a man says to you that he furnishes you with the very best Cypress, sap free, and all that sort of thing, do you ask him how many feet of this he has air-drying? Can he prove to you that not a stick of it goes into your greenhouse before it is air-dried fully two years? Does he take this material out of the yard of a lumber company or out of his own yard? Will the lumber yard company sort the stuff out for him, discarding all sappy pieces, giving him the cream of the lot? Do you really believe a lumber company does business that way? Now, here is our point, we control large tracts of lumber lands in the South, cut all our own wood, ship it North in our own vessels, and always have at least five million feet air-drying. Not a stick of this wood goes into your house before it has been air-dried for two years; and that is not all, every piece that comes to the mill is passed on by our expert, who chalks every sappy spot, be it white or blue sap. All sappy parts are then sawed out and burned up. Now notice the words, "burned up." We do not think it is a fair deal to use any of these sappy pieces in the smaller parts of ventilating sash, or out of sight places. You get just as good wood in these smaller parts as you do in the sashbars.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Aquatics.

One of the most delightful features of our parks, public gardens and of many private estates are the ponds of nymphæas, nelumbiums and other aquatic plants. Commercially they are not as much grown as they might be, but many florists are asked advice as to their treatment and not infrequently take contracts to plant ponds with them. It will soon be time to set out the hardier nymphæas. We have now a wonderful variety of these beautiful aquatic flowers, due in large measure to the painstaking labors of M. Marliac, the French hybridist, who by crossing the common English water lily, N. odorata, with the Cape Cod pink pond lily, N. odorata rosea, and the Florida variety, N. flava, has given us a wonderful range of colors in this regal plant.

Ponds or pools for the culture of aquatics are often artificial, in which case walls of masonry or concrete and a bottom of concrete or clay puddled to a depth of six or eight inches, are necessary. The action of severe frost is liable to cause cracks in these artificial pools, which it may be necessary each spring to repair. The water should be from two to three feet deep and for compost a mixture of two-thirds pasture sod and one-third rotted cow manure is suitable. In some cases boxes four feet square and a foot deep are used to hold this compost, which should carry most varieties two years, although some cultivators prefer to plant annually. If possible, prepare the compost some time before it is needed and cover with a layer of two inches of coarse sand after planting.

It would be well to bear in mind that under natural conditions nymphæas grow in full sunshine and they should not, therefore, be planted near overhanging trees. It should also be remembered that in their natural state they have rich, alluvial mud in abundance and their food must not be stinted. In many of the concrete creations on expensive estates there is an objection to having the water clouded. The idea is to sit and watch the gambols of the carp or pickerel in the pellucid water, but aquatics need more than clear water to thrive in and if an abundance of rich soil is not provided, poor plants will be the result. Do not set the plants too closely. They should be allowed fifty to seventy-five square feet of space each.

The Best Nymphæas.

The hardy varieties of nymphæa can be planted early in May. We notice that those in our ponds are already growing quite a little in spite of the cold, backward spring. Here are a few of the best hardy varieties, which can be left out over winter if the roots are at a sufficient depth to be clear of freezing: N. odorata, pure white; N. odorata rosea, pink, commonly called the Cape Cod pond lily; N. odorata sulphurea, yellow; N.

Marliacea chromatella, yellow; N. Marliacea rosea, pink; N. Marliacea albida, white; N. tuberosa, white, a luxuriant grower, needs more space than other varieties; N. Laydekeri rosea, rosy pink, and N. Robinsoniana, another hybrid of M. Latour-Marliac, color yellow, overlaid with reddish purple.

A few of the best tender sorts to plant are: N. Zanzibariensis, dark blue; N. pulcherrima, light blue; N. dentata and N. dentata magnifica, pure white; N. Devoniensis, red; N. rubra-rosea, red; N. Capensis, sky blue; N. Zanzibariensis rosea, rosy pink; N. Mrs. C. W. Ward, rosy pink, and N. O'Marana, reddish pink. As some of the tender varieties are night bloomers only, in purchasing a selection it should be stated whether night or day blooming sorts are wanted. Tender varieties should not be set out until the first week in June, when the water has become well warmed, and must be stored in winter in a tank of moderately warm water.

Nelumbiums.

The nelumbiums, or lotuses, are noble aquatic plants, but are better grown in a separate pond from the nymphæas, as they grow so much more luxuriantly and throw their foliage and flowers a considerable height above the water. They should be planted about the middle of May, certainly not later than June 10. They require a good bed of rich mud and, while they may not grow very fast nor bloom much the first year, they will increase rapidly and flower freely in succeeding years. The nelumbiums are all perfectly hardy in our northern states. A few good varieties are: N. speciosum, Egyptian lotus, rose; N. Pekinensis rubrum, rosy carmine; N. luteum, yellow; N. album grandiflorum, white, and N. kermesina, pink.

Other Aquatics.

A few good aquatics to use in addition to nymphæas and nelumbiums are: Cyperus papyrus, Egyptian paper plant; Limncharis Humboldtii, water poppy; Eichhornia crassipes major, water hyacinth; Myriophyllum proserpinacoides, parrot's feather; Aponogeton distachyum, cape pond weed; Pistia Stratiotes, water lettuce; Pontederia cordata, pick-orel weed; Sagittaria Montevicensis, giant arrowhead; Limncharis Plumieri, Typha latifolia, the well-known cat-tail, and Saururus cernuus, lizard's tail.

Hardening Off Bedding Stock.

Some attention should now be given to the gradual hardening off of many of the bedding plants. Too little attention is generally given to this, with the consequence that the plants, when set out, stand still for a long time, or even deteriorate. It means a little more work to move your plants around into cooler quarters before planting them outdoors, but it will pay you to do it. Geraniums, if you are getting crowded for room, will now do well in frames. So will verbenas, dianthus, Drummond's phlox, petunias, ageratums and a number of other sorts. Coleus, alternanthera, Salvia splendens, heliotrope and other tender plants must still be kept in the greenhouses. Place a layer of coal ashes to set the pots or flats on; it keeps worms away. See that the sashes are tight and be sure to close them on cool nights, but gradually increase the toothsome chewing for the cut-worms which invariably do an immense amount of damage each spring. The earliest asters should be sufficiently hardened to plant out by the middle of the month and ten weeks' stocks can go out any time. A light freezing will not hurt them. By planting out the hardier sorts now the work will be a little less strenuous toward the end of May.

Brief Reminders.

A second sowing of sweet peas is now seasonable. Cover the seeds to the depth of three inches. The early sowings should now be appearing above ground. Support them with brush or wire netting as soon as possible and thin out if they have come up too thickly.

Narcissi and tulips will now be in bloom in the open. Take note of desirable bedding sorts for future use. The public parks and gardens usually have names attached and it will pay to visit one at the height of the bulb season.

Evergreens do well transplanted during the first half of May. Cool, cloudy days are the best for this work, but we cannot always get such. Do not allow roots to be planted dry. Mulch after planting and a syringing overhead will be appreciated.

If you have forgotten to plant out any gladioli in the rush of other work, get a batch out at once.

See that flats and pots of young seed-not allow them to suffer from a want of it.

Perennial phlox cuttings put in sand will root freely now and make nice plants for late flowering. Cuttings root easily, treated the same as chrysanthemums.

Planting of perennials should be completed as soon as possible, unless stock is in pots, in which case it can be carried on for some time yet.

Plan to reserve a sufficient stock of all bedding plants for propagating purposes another fall. It is best to set them on one side and mark "not for sale," or "sold."

If you are getting crowded again indoors, pull out some of the carnations which have seen their best days and utilize the space for other plants.

If you run your carnations late, plant a few tomatoes up the posts. If you cannot sell them all, you can probably use them at home.

EUPATORIUM WEINMANNIANUM.

Eupatoriums and their near relatives, the hebecliniums, are, with few exceptions, natives of our hemisphere. Of the several hundred species known to botanists only a limited number merit horticultural recognition. They are either summer-flowering herbaceous plants or casual inhabitants of greenhouse or conservatory, where, in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees, with abundant light and water given, some varieties have proven to be more or less ornamental winter-flowering pot plants. To the best type of the latter class belongs Eupatorium Weinmannianum, a native of tropical South America.

This species is of simple culture. Cuttings strike easily in spring. They should be well established in 3-inch pots in May. If pot culture is intended, I would advise to plant now five to six plants together in, perhaps, a 7-inch size. Eupatoriums are gross feeders and require a rich, loamy soil. When moving them outdoors always plunge your pots in the ground to prevent the soil from drying out too quickly. On hot days water freely morning and night and, after your plants are well rooted, give manure water once a week. Thus treated they should be specimen plants from one and a half to two feet high when, in the autumn, time for housing arrives.

Eupatorium Weinmannianum also does well when planted out in the open ground over summer, especially the second year. The bushes should be cut back somewhat right after flowering, or when moving them outdoors. On a sunny place, during the growing season they need plenty of moisture and frequent cultivating. If taken up carefully in the fall, and shaded for a few days after potting, they lose hardly any leaves.

The specimen illustrated was a two-year-old plant, which had been grown in the open ground the previous summer. It was flowering in the greenhouses of Clay Kemble, Esq., in Lakewood, Pa., and bore its blossoms all through the months of December and January without showing the least sign of fading.

Eupatorium Weinmannianum is, of course, not a commercial plant in the present sense of the word; neither are its handsome flowers, when cut, very lasting material for vases. Nevertheless a few well-grown specimens covered with their large white, or pinkish-white, ventilation until on warm days they can be fully exposed. Plants treated in this way will do much better than if taken right outdoors from a warm greenhouse.

Field Planting.

You will probably have your young carnation stock in frames before now, if they are not already planted out, and your violets should be getting hardened off. Better to have these well hardened, for the tender, coddled plants make lings are more fully watered. A little carelessness may mean a serious loss. Leave night ventilation in your houses now, if nights are warm.

Ericas, such as melanthera, gracilis and cafra densa, can be plunged or planted outdoors any time now. They ought to have been pruned back somewhat after flowering.

Keep pansies, myosotis, daisies and similar spring flowering plants fully exposed now. It will keep them stocky. As they like an abundance of water, do slightly fragrant corymbs are not only very useful, but, if advantageously placed, may become highly attractive ornaments in any private conservatory. As the choice in flowering pot plants during December and January is not very large, I recommend this eupatorium especially to the private gardeners, and, on account of its easy culture, it also is a good thing for the florist to offer to buyers of house plants.

RICHARD ROTHE.

BEGONIA CAROLUS.

Begonia Carolus is a new and improved form of the well-known Begonia Fendli, introduced by John Feast, of Baltimore, some thirty years ago. Carolus blooms profusely during the late winter and early spring months, with large trusses of handsome, daybreak pink flowers, and can always be had at its prime for Easter, be it early or late. The leaves are undulated, showing the bright red of the under side of the leaf in pleasing contrast to the vivid green of the upper surface. The plants are attractive, not only when in flower but when out of bloom because of the foliage. The plant is tolerant of varying conditions, but does best in a temperature of 56 degrees to 60 degrees. The illustration is from a photograph of a plant in an 8-inch pot made the latter part of March at the establishment of Michler Bros., at Lexington, Ky., where the variety originated and was named. Michler Bros. say that of all begonias they find this the easiest to propagate. Every leaf rooted in the spring makes a salable plant for the following autumn. They are working up a large stock.

FERTILIZERS.

With the florist and market gardener of today there is no longer any question as to the advisability of using a commercial fertilizer in addition to ordinary manure. The question is, what kind of a fertilizer is the best and most economical to use?

The varied forms of plant life cultivated by the up-to-date grower make the need of a well balanced general fertilizer more and more apparent. The constant research of our chemists has brought to light in our generation many sources of the elements of nitrogen, potash and phosphoric acid hitherto unknown or disregarded. These "fertilizer element vehicles" are at the disposal of the consumer in countless numbers, and the grower finds himself scratching his head at the problem presented.

A very common and thoughtless course is often adopted by the inexperienced grower in selecting a suitable fertilizer. Too often the flaring and loudly declaimed analysis is considered only as to percentages of nitrogen, potash or phosphoric acid and no investigation is made as to the ingredients contained.

This question of what a fertilizer is composed of is of vital importance to the grower. For instance, organic forms of nitrogen, such as leather meal, etc., may analyze a high percentage of nitrogen, but their slow decomposition makes them nearly worthless to the grower who is after immediate results.

Nitrate of soda and sulphate of ammonia remain unequalled as a source of available nitrogen, and fertilizers in which the nitrogen is derived from these sources, may always be depended upon and will always stand above par in the mind of the modern grower.

Sources of potash are more infrequent. The importation of potash salts has grown to such proportions that other sources of potash are seldom given consideration. Sulphate of potash is generally conceded to be superior to muriate of potash on account of the presence in muriate of potash of chlorides, which are injurious to some plants.

Sources of phosphoric acid are always at hand. Perhaps the use of bones as a source is the most common. Pure bone meal is a favorite with many growers, as besides its large percentage of phosphoric acid it also contains a fair quantity of organic nitrogen, which is gradually assimilated by the soil, thus adding to its value in preference to phosphate rock.

Of late years the large importations of guano have placed a very valuable general utility fertilizer before the grower. Guano, besides containing generous proportions of all three of the fertilizer elements, possesses some peculiar chemical conditions not found elsewhere. The different grades of guano are all found to not only advance quickly to a complete resolution to the fertilizer elements, but seem to impart a mellowness and balance to the soil.

We would, therefore, conclude that with these the best of the fertilizer element sources at hand as standards, the true value of a fertilizer may be determined by comparison in price and its percentage of available elements in the best form, with the market price and form of those fertilizer sources which are standard.

We also would conclude that a fertilizer composed solely of these standard fertilizer sources, without the addition of anything else (unless it be a little gypsum or land plaster to act as a chemical reagent), would be the best possible general forcing fertilizer for the many and diversified needs of the modern grower.

When all is said and done, by far the most important factor in a fertilizer is that it shall, as far as possible, build up all parts of the plant. Florists or others that build up one part of the plant at the expense of the others soon have a lopsided plant; that is, not healthy and perfect, more liable to disease and never of any permanent vigor; whereas, by building up all parts of the plant, the roots, stems, leaves, flowers, fruit and seeds, a symmetrical and thoroughly healthy plant, full of life and vigor, is obtained.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS.

I have a fine lot of Geranium John Doyle, but there are a good many of them that are dying off. The foliage looks healthy, but the lower leaves have begun to get yellow. The roots are healthy-looking and the soil is not too wet or too dry. On the bottom of the stem they are turning black and dying off. Kindly let me know what is the cause of this. I never had it happen before. They are all good, strong plants and I keep them at 55 degrees to 60 degrees by night and at 65 degrees by day. F. B.

The temperature named should suit geraniums well. The rot on the stem, commonly termed "damping off," is generally caused by too much moisture at the roots. We would advise keeping the plants dry for a few days, to harden the stems, and this should tend to stop the disease. Do not shade them at all, but give full exposure to the sun. Spray overhead once or twice a day to keep the plants from shriveling, but allow the soil in the pots to get quite dry. We think a few days of this treatment will remedy the trouble. C. W.

report a large demand for the best varieties and it may not be possible to procure what you want a few weeks later. JOSEPH P. BROOKS.

FOLIAGE TURNING RED.

You will find enclosed with this letter a few geranium leaves and, as you will notice, they much resemble autumn leaves from the forest trees. The plants have been quite thrifty and of good, healthy color until the last week, when they began to turn red and finally to dry up. Some of the plants in 4-inch pots have assumed a clubby growth, producing great quantity of leaves, some large and others smaller and much curled or crimped. Please tell me the cause and a remedy for same. J. B. A.

Either the plants have become pot-bound and are in rather poor soil or they have been allowed to dry out too much, perhaps a combination of the two. The trouble is not at all uncommon, but is not serious and can be corrected by feeding the plants. We would recommend watering with a weak solution of nitrate of soda or sulphate of ammonia in the water at intervals of five to six days until the foliage assumes a healthier hue. Give light doses, or you may do harm. Do not crowd your plants, but give them space in which to grow. Water carefully and we think you will soon get rid of red foliage. C. W.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES—WEST.

Preparing for Planting.

Chrysanthemum growers should at this time have their space on the benches all figured out. That is, they should have reduced to writing, exactly the number of plants they will require for their space. It should be figured out bench by bench and then the grower should go over his stock and make certain that he has provided the necessary number of plants, and some surplus to provide for the rejection of plants which are not in good shape at the time for benching.

A great many times it has happened that a grower would find, when he came to planting his houses, that he was short of the required number of good plants for filling his benches. He then would change his mind and either use the space for some catch crop or let it go with less than the number of plants he had intended to grow in the house. In either case the result is a waste of space, and space is money to the greenhouse owner.

A grower may be short of stock for a variety of reasons. He may have been so busy that he neglected the important detail of propagating, thinking he had plenty of time, or he may have neglected his old stock, allowing them to grow so long that he really got the second batch of cuttings in place of the first. Now, to make up for this set-back in many cases is easy. If the first batch of cuttings was rooted, potted and planted out at the proper time, in a bench of good, rich soil, they will produce a fine lot of cuttings from now till the end of June. Of course, the early and dwarf varieties, if propagated at this late date, will be short but will give blooms of fair size. The mid-season and late varieties will produce good average blooms and straight stems, as these old plants grow ahead and do not make the crown bud until its natural time. If they are kept cool they can be had late, after the bulk of the chrysanthemum crops have been marketed, when they usually bring excellent prices.

Care must now be taken to see that the young stock is not allowed to become too tall and spindling. If the stock is now in 2-inch pots, and must remain there until planting time, it is likely to become too tall; planting time may be the latter part of May, so that it would be better to give the plants a little more space one way. This will not only prevent their drawing up, but will keep the bottom foliage from becoming yellow and help to keep the stock free from disease. Light and air are essential to chrysanthemums at all times.

I prefer to use 2½-inch pots for the young stock. These can be placed close together and will stand for watering, spraying and syringing. In planting I set nearly all varieties 8x10 inches or 9x9 inches, growing one flower to the plant and counting on getting first-class blooms. For an ordinarily good grade of commercial blooms I plant 8x10 and 8x12 inches, according to the variety, and grow two blooms to each plant. Some of the small-leaved varieties may be planted 8x8 and two stems carried up.

Now, without delay, figure out exactly what you will do in planting your houses of chrysanthemums and see that you have the stock. If not on hand procure it, either by propagation or purchase. The growers of young stock of chrysanthemums for the wholesale trade

A KNICKERBOCKER DECORATION.

The illustration opposite is from a photograph of a dinner table decoration given by James B. Regan, proprietor of the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, previous to his sailing for Europe. Attached to the ceiling of the room was a huge umbrella frame nine feet across. The ribs were all covered with smilax, 275 strings being used for same. Underneath the umbrella were used over 5,000 Narcissus Golden Spur. The outside edge of the umbrella was trimmed with long strips of Asparagus plumosus, and the supporting ribs covered with Richmond roses, 400 being used, and about fifty incandescent lights, the same color as the narcissi. In the center of the table was a miniature lake, about twelve feet long and four wide, banked on each side with thick clumps of moss and hundreds of fronds of Adiantum Farleyense. In this lake were several dozen fancy, fan-tail gold-fish and swans, one of the latter being plainly seen in the photograph. At this dinner the celebrated gold service of the Knickerbocker was used, and this feature of the dinner was the admiration of all who saw it. The entire decoration was designed and carried out under the management of David D. Howells, manager of the floral department in the hotel.

The illustration does not do credit to the decoration, for the reason that the photograph was a poor one. The photographer evidently was more or less of an amateur, for, while he got a little something of what was on the table, all he succeeded in getting of the "umbrella," which was the principal feature of the decoration, was the lights.

FLORISTS LOSE SUIT.

It was decided by a Superior Court jury, April 22, that Anton Schmidt and Henry Cook, owners of a brickyard on Beecher street near Pleasant Run, Indianapolis, Ind., had not been responsible for ruining flowers at the greenhouses of Fielding A. Conway and Harvey Handy, which were across the street. The florists charged that the smoke and gases from the brick kiln, which they said should have been provided with a smoke consuming arrangement, ruined their flowers, and asked $5,000 damages. The defendants insisted that the brick kiln had not been the cause of the damage of which the plaintiffs complained.

PEACHES UNDER GLASS.

Kindly advise me how to force peaches under glass. I have just planted peach trees, which came in balls in 8-inch pots several months after being ordered.

O. K.

You should not attempt to do any forcing this year. Let the plants come away of their own accord, but after they have started see that the temperature does not fall below 40 degrees. Your efforts for this season should be directed towards the procuring of a clean, healthy growth and the shaping of your trees. They should be well pruned back before they begin to move and trained into whatever shape you desire to have them, according as they grow.

When the growths have attained a length of about one inch, you will have to select the shoots that are best suited and most conveniently placed for training in the direction you desire for the shaping of your trees, and rub out the buds which you cannot use. Do not make the mistake of leaving too many. Always keep in mind that the shoots you lay in this season will later on be the main branches of your trees. Give plenty of air night and day, when weather will permit, to keep your foliage strong and your growths firm. Give plenty of water and syringe your trees thoroughly, at least twice a week, to prevent the attacks of red spider and other insects. Peach trees are not as a rule hard to keep clean, as insects are not apt to trouble them if the trees are kept in good health, but careless treatment will bring insect pests on even the hardiest of plants.

Next year you can begin forcing any time after January 1, according to the time you wish to have the fruit ready. Beginning about January 1 the fruit would be ready on the earliest varieties about the middle of May; starting about March 1 would give ripe fruit about June 20. The trees should be pruned at least a month before starting and the old wood should get a good washing with a solution of whale-oil soap, or some such insecticide, to dislodge any insects that may be hidden away in the crevices of the bark, and the trees tied into shape. The shoots should never be tied across one another and should be brought out as straight from the main branches as possible. A space of four inches should be left between the shoots, which will give room for the full development of the foliage without crowding.

After starting, the trees should be syringed lightly every morning and the floor of the house damped down, so as to keep sufficient moisture in the atmosphere to assist the bursting of the buds. The temperature should not exceed 40 degrees at night for the first two weeks; then a rise of 5 degrees may be allowed, but it should in no case be allowed to exceed 45 degrees until after flowering is over and the fruit set. A high temperature is certain to result in the dropping of the buds before setting takes place, resulting in no crop. This is the point where the greatest number of failures occur in the growing of peaches under glass. At first the day temperature should not exceed 55 degrees, with air on, but after the first two weeks it may be allowed to rise to 60 degrees. After the fruit is set and swelling the temperature should be gradually raised to 60 degrees at night and 75 degrees on bright days.

Disbudding requires attention as growth advances and no novice should be set at the job; it requires a man who knows what to take off and what to leave. Two things must be borne in mind: First, to leave enough growth to provide sufficient foliage for the healthy development of the tree and fruit, and, second, to provide sufficient wood for next year's crop, as the fruit is all borne on the young growths of the previous year.

Provision should be made for young growths to take the place of the old ones, so that these can be cut out next spring. To do this, a good strong growth should be taken away from as near the base of the present shoot as possible. By base, I mean that point where the present fruiting shoot branches away from the larger stem. After the fruit has been thinned out, the first shoot beyond the fruit should be left to provide an outlet for the sap and insure free circulation to the fruit; but, unless this shoot is needed as a fruiting shoot for next year, it can be pinched after it has made about three joints. The lateral shoots, that will eventually start from where the shoot was pinched, should be stopped at the first joint, and so on, according as the laterals are produced. The leading or point growth should also be left, and enough along the branches to provide sufficient foliage to furnish the tree, but these later can be pinched at the second or third joint and the laterals pinched as they appear. All shoots not required should be rubbed out after the buds are well started. There is no need to let them attain a length of several inches and then take them off; this would only be robbing the tree. The time to take them is just as soon as the necessary shoots can be selected.

Regarding the thinning of the fruit, part of it should be taken off just after setting, but enough should be left to allow for what may fail to stone. After stoning they can safely be thinned to the proper distance. An old rule was to allow one peach for every square foot of tree. But a good, healthy tree will carry rather more than this, though it should not exceed it very much if first-class fruit is desired.

The trees can be syringed up to the time the fruit begins to color, but should be discontinued from that time till after the fruit is picked, when an occasional good syringing will be beneficial.

The results of next year's crop depend largely on the thorough ripening of the wood; so careful attention should be given to this matter towards fall, by keeping on the dry side and giving all the air possible. The ventilators should be closed only in the event of a sudden cold spell, lowering the temperature gradually to below the freezing point. The house may be shut down on very cold nights through the winter, but air should be admitted, if at all possible, through the day. It does not matter how much frost they get; it won't do the trees any harm, only freezing and thawing should be avoided as much as possible. So, by raising the ventilators before the thermometer rises to the freezing point, a more even temperature can be maintained. W. S. CROYDON.

high-grade blooms during the season of hot weather, when nature is doing her utmost to bring about maturity in a limited time. RIBES.

CAUSES OF BULL-HEADS.

Can you give any reason for Brides coming bull-headed? A good percentage of the present crop are coming so.

R. H. G.

The causes which tend to induce bull-heads are many and varied, and without knowing the attending conditions it would be hard to ascribe a definite cause.

Some of the causes are: Too much manure in the compost; overfeeding with liquid manure, thus producing too rank growth in the spring. Atmospheric conditions also have their influence. Close, muggy air, by fostering a soft, spongy growth, has a tendency to cause bull-heads in some varieties. These and many other conditions having the same tendency should be avoided, especially in spring. RIBES.

TIME TO SOW PRIMULAS.

Will you kindly tell me the right time to sow Chinese fringed primroses, fern-leaved kinds for wholesaling at Christmas, and obconica grandiflora for the same time. S. A. P.

Seeds of both the Chinese primroses, Primula Sinensis and P. obconica should be sown without delay in pans or shallow flats in a compost of leaf-mold, loam and sand with a little powdered charcoal added. Place in a close, moist house kept at 60 degrees to 65 degrees at night and cover with paper until the seeds germinate, which should be in from two to three weeks. Pick off in flats when sufficiently large to handle, pot off as needed and grow in coldframes during summer, protected with lath shadings for the best results. C. W.

SEASONABLE TREATMENT.

The plants in the bench having now attained their maximum size, and the soil in the bench having become deficient in some of the elements necessary for the support and proper development of the buds, we should, if we wish to retain the size and quality of bloom during the interval between now and planting time, find some way to supply these elements and administer them in such a form that the plants can make immediate use of it. This can be done to a certain extent by giving the food in a liquid form, as in this form it is easily assimilated.

Unfortunately, it has been proved beyond a doubt that a too frequent use of food in this form is at any season very detrimental to the health of the plants and also reduces the quality of the blooms, particularly if they are entirely dependent on this form of food.

As the warm weather approaches and the roots become more active, causing a heavy growth of wood, there should at all times be a reserve store of food on hand from which the plants can derive a continued sustenance and so be enabled to develop good wood, foliage and bloom. To protect, encourage and feed the young roots during hot weather, a mulch containing the necessary elements should be applied. To be of immediate use, the material should be in a concentrated form and of sufficient richness to maintain the plant during the remainder of the season. Well decomposed cow manure contains most of these elements and in their proper proportions, with few of those caustic elements so prevalent in many of the chemically prepared foods. To prevent the manure from floating during the process of watering, it should be mixed with one-third of its bulk of good, loamy soil, and to each bushel of this compost should be added one and one-half pounds of desiccated bone meal. This helps materially in giving strength to the stems and foliage and substance and color to the petals.

At this season mulch can be given in larger quantities than at any other time, one and one-half inches being none too thick if the plants are robust and the compost thoroughly incorporated. As the manure in the compost will absorb and retain the moisture, the bench may often present the appearance of being wet when the soil beneath the mulch may be quite dry. Frequent examinations should be made to see that this does not occur.

A light top-dressing of wood or vegetable ashes, which contain nearly all the elements necessary to plant life in the most concentrated form, would now be of great benefit in building up the tissues necessary to the perfect development of

IS LAWSON DETERIORATING?

With many carnation growers, the burning question the last few years has been "Is Lawson running out?" I do not think it is. In my opinion, the only change is for the better.

Lawson of course has some bad faults: First, its inclination to throw short stems, at least in the early part of the season; second, it has a tendency to come off color, and, third, it bursts the calyx.

All of these faults can be greatly modified, if not entirely eliminated, by proper cultural methods and careful and intelligent selection. Of late years it has been proven that the length of stem may be materially improved by growing under glass all summer instead of planting in the field for a part of the season. This may be either by shifting them on gradually from 2-inch pots until they finally reach the 4-inch pots or by planting on the permanent beds during the early part of June. This method is admirably adapted to the requirements of all the varieties of Lawson, in so far that it overcomes the short stem objection.

Lawson is prone to produce many blooms that are off shade. The plants producing these flowers should not be propagated from. The most careful man, with the highest degree of intelligence, is none too good to take the carnation cuttings. The propagator must avoid taking cuttings from any plant that is deficient in length of stem, habit of growth, in vigor of constitution, or in color, or form of flower. If this is rigidly, persistently and perpetually practiced, one will, in a few years, see a wonderful improvement in any variety that has had the good fortune to inherit a strong constitution, such as has Lawson and its numerous offspring.

As to the propensity to split the calyx, here, we may fairly answer that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. During the last few months, I have seen many thousands of carnations of most leading varieties, grown on my place, in other parts of Ontario, and in the states of New York and Pennsylvania. But, I have to confess that I have yet to see the variety that does not split its calyx to a greater or less extent.

There is a great difference in varieties in this tendency to split, but I find that in places where the smallest percentage of splits is found, the greatest diligence is observed in obtaining an even temperature, and at a degree best suited to the variety grown. The variety with the least tendency to split, will, under unfavorable conditions, do so badly, and the variety most susceptible to splitting, will, under favorable conditions, have the splitting reduced.

Therefore, with careful selection of the cuttings, and proper cultural methods, where is the variety today that will give better results from a given number of plants than does Mrs. T. W. Lawson? Even that grand variety, Enchantress, will not surpass Lawson in the number of good blooms, day by day, for a period of, say, eight months.

In my humble opinion, Lawson is not dead yet. A large number that were born into the carnation world after Mrs. Lawson, have died a natural death, whereas the latter, I find, is still sawing wood at most of the old stands. In the course of time, probably, we will obtain a variety, or possibly a number, that will be worthy of taking Mrs. Lawson's place, but, up to the present, I am still in search of it. H. L. JANZEN.

PRIMULA COCKBURNIANA.

The most striking novelty among primulas within recent years, the fine Primula Cockburniana, has been the object of much admiration and curiosity since its introduction by Veitch & Sons, of Chelsea, England. Although it has been frequently noticed in the gardening press during the last year, it has not been much cultivated as yet, and a few notes upon it may be of interest.

The most striking feature of Primula Cockburniana is the color of its flowers, which open a brilliant scarlet, and gradually pass off to an orange-scarlet, somewhat of the shade of that old-fashioned plant, Hieracium aurantiacum. It has fair-sized heads of bloom, and the color of the blooms seems even enhanced by the mealy stems. The plants seen were from nine inches to a foot in height.

Unfortunately, this distinct primula, which has no rival in its own color, has one grave defect in the eyes of many. This is its biennial character, and it should thus be sown annually if a stock is to be maintained. Seeds germinate freely enough if sown under glass. The seedlings should be pricked out in good time and not planted out until the following spring. It seems to prefer a rather moist position. A good group is a spectacle one rarely finds equalled among flowers of its kind. It is quite sure to take a place among our useful plants.

Clematis Paniculata, a Favorite "Porch Climber."

THE CLEMATIS.

Although the clematis more properly belongs in the domain of the nurseryman than in that of the florist, we are continually asked to supply plants of several varieties of these free flowering, hardy climbers.

Some are readily increased by cuttings. The paniculata type root freely from pieces of the young growth, and there is no better place than the gentle heat of a hotbed. They all are, however, bought very cheaply from the nurseryman. The large flowered Jackmanii type are usually grafted on the roots of C. flammula, the common European, or the root of any strong growing variety. The florist buys his clematis and is more interested in knowing how to make them grow satisfactorily than how to propagate them. Very strong plants of Jackmanii and other large-flowering varieties are imported every fall, arriving here early in November or perhaps a little earlier. We spread out the roots and lay them in trenches in the coldframe during winter and in severe weather cover with glass, removing it before forced by the suns of March. We believe they are more satisfactory to our customers planted this way than potted and given any time in the greenhouse. The potted plants look well when sold, but are more liable to suffer from neglect after planting. Strong plants have such a mass of roots that it is impossible to spread them sufficiently for all to get earth around them, so we cut out about half the roots, which enables us to get some soil among them.

You dare not guarantee the clematis. If you do you will have to make good many losses. But you can plant them with care and give good advice as to the attention they need. They are nearly always planted against a veranda, whose overhanging roof often keeps the rain away, or they may be on the side of the house, or an aspect where rains are infrequent. They should during summer receive copious waterings. William Scott has said that when planting out each clematis should receive a barrow load of good, rich soil and not be put into a small hole and have clay or brickbats to feed on, which is often the result of the grading and sodding that is done around a pretty house.

In milder countries the gorgeous Jackmanii and its kindred varieties may retain their stems through the winter; in the rigorous northern winters they do not, but when well established the roots have such vigor that the young shoots spring from the ground in a few weeks, and by the end of June are a gorgeous mass of bloom seven, eight and nine feet high, and five or six feet across. All these flower from the growth of the same year.

There are many species and varieties of clematis and some of them are very distinct. A few of them are natives of North America and make splendid plants for covering fences, railings, etc. C. paniculata is very hardy and is the one most largely used. It is shown in the accompanying illustration and is covered from July on with its white, finely divided flowers, resembling almost balls of cotton.

ARAUCARIAS.

I would be pleased if you could give me any information how to propagate Araucaria excelsa. Is there any remedy for the white fly? If there is, please let us know. B. L.

Araucaria excelsa is readily raised from seeds, but seedlings never make as fine plants as those grown from cuttings. These are propagated from the leading shoots of the tops and branches inserted in sand and covered with a hand-glass or frame until rooted. But it doesn't pay to propagate araucarias in this country; let the Belgian do that; he can sell them so cheaply that greenhouse space is better used for other purposes.

As to the white fly, for the methods of extermination, see page 1676 of the issue of April 18.

SOUTH BEND, IND.—Kinyon Bros. have contracted for the building of two new greenhouses, each 35x65 feet, to be devoted to carnations and roses.

CAPE JASMINE.

The report from south Texas is to the effect that the annual crop of cape jasmine promises to be earlier than usual. Indeed, a few small shipments already have been sent north and considerable quantities will be moving within the next few days.

The season in Texas has been a favorable one for this crop and it is the general report that quality will be of the best. The warm weather in April gave the plants an early start and the cold, which has checked all outdoor vegetation in the north, has not injured the jasmynes. It is expected that the supply will hold all through May and that the season will wind up with Memorial day, instead of being only just at the beginning, as it has been in some more backward seasons.

C. W. Benson states that the general special rate now applies to jasmine shipments from Alvin. This is twenty per cent less than merchandise rate and pound rates apply. The shippers from Alvin all are looking for a large season.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

At last we have seasonable weather; even old Dr. Humidity called on Monday. The grass, and buds, and leaves have been ready for business two weeks, but were held up by the unseasonable cold. Even last week it was only by fits and starts that any real enthusiasm was created. Now all nature smiles. The magnolias and forsythias are in bloom; the leaves are opening hourly. Before this paper reaches its readers it will be a new world we live in, and we deserve it. March and April have been depressing. No one can remember a season so disagreeable as the one just buried. There have been no tears at the obsequies. No wonder Fischer and his freesias have gone to California. The weather there won't "freesia." Another winter like this and we will all want to emigrate thither.

Now come the busy days of planting and the crowded shipments of the nurserymen. The big stores, too, with their thousands of hardy roses and shrubs to dispose of, will have to work day and night in their deliveries. Trepel, and Weir, and Burnham, and the other departmentalists, will need more prancing teams to meet the demand. Everywhere prosperity abounds. Real estate is rising in value daily. The love for country life, and all it means to horticulture, is fostered as never before and the old saying that the business in this country is "only in its infancy" is more and more apparent as the seasons recur and the enormous demand for the nurseryman's productions manifests itself.

In the wholesale cut flower market, roses are growing more abundant daily. Beauties and all the rest of them accepted the usual May values at the beginning of the week, with no special demand. Fifteen cents was top, with 12 and 10 cents quite possible before the week is over. Maids and Brides sold well at 5 cents for selected stock, but boxes were closed as low as 2 cents and 3 cents where large purchases were made. The general expectation is for the usual average at this season of the year.

The cold weather has delayed the expected shipments of southern lilac. Sweet peas have been arriving in large quantities. Carnations hold well, the splendid novelties never grading better than now, easily commanding 3 cents to 4 cents, and worth it. Still a few boxes of so-called violets come down the river, but the retail stores do not want them, nor does the public, nor the merchants du pave, which means the Grecian mercantile contingent.

Orchids hold their price firmly and there are none too many of them. Now that the May weddings are on they will all be needed here. Outside cities would do well to anticipate this and book their orders well ahead. Retailers have had and would like to say that this is one some notable weddings already, and many bookings, they tell me, for May and June.

Various Notes.

Donohoe opens his new store at 17 East Twenty-eighth street June 1. It will be large, up-to-date and quite in keeping with the bon-ton section of the city. One cannot afford now to open a store anywhere in the metropolis that is not elegant in all its appointments. The other kind soon go out of business, leaving unpaid bills and unsavory reputations. There have been some closings lately that are no credit to retail floriculture in New York.

May 12 the New York Florists' Club will meet again. Plant exhibits are requested. Illustrations of Decoration day novelties will be welcome. Great preparations are being made by the growers in this section for the holiday. The retail windows now are full of hydrangeas and spring flowers.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was in the city April 29 and had on exhibition in Traendly & Schenck's windows some fine specimens of Pandanus Veitchii, Begonia Agatha and Hydrangea Otaksa. He finds the New York market always open for his perfect specimens. Mr. Peterson left for the Jamestown exhibition on Tuesday and has made a large shipment of his stock there.

Carl Jurgens, Jr., and wife, of Newport, were in New York April 29 on their way to Jamestown. It is early yet for a visit to the world's fair, but there will be steady travel later on, from New York by train and boat, and it is intimated a fare of $5 will prevail. Doubtless hundreds of the florists who attend the meeting of the S. A. F. at Philadelphia will make the fair a part of their summer holiday.

Already the popularity of the window-boxes is in evidence in the streets of New York. Hardly a house in the first-class residence district is without them, and the hotels everywhere are more profuse than ever in plant, and flower, and bay tree decoration. As an illustration of the universality of the custom, the veteran James Hart has eight big hotels on his list, the care of the plants and their renewal being contracted for by the season. Every retailer of importance has his quiver full of these orders and no hotel worthy of the name is now remiss in this much-to-be-commended courtesy to Dame Nature. Some of the inside decorations of the hotels are most elaborate. Enormous palms are used and bay trees seem to lose none of their popularity. The great importers of these handsome trees, Bobbink & Atkins, the Julius Roehrs Co., Schultheis, Siebrecht and many others, are worthy of great commendation in the patient, persistent creation of demand which they, by years of effort, have at last popularized.

The great dailies of the metropolitan press are catering to the popular desire for information on horticultural subjects and, while their purpose is honest and unselfish, they sadly need a John F. Sullivan to censor their articles before sending them out to a hungry and enquiring world.

After a strenuous season the wholesalers, some of them, are taking a much needed resting spell in the afternoons, either visiting their growers or looking after their greenhouses. By the by, the baseball season has opened and the ponies are running at Jamaica.

The plantsmen, who have conservatories on Twenty-ninth street, have had a busy spring. Many of the retailers depend on these excellent sources of supply and do not visit the early plant market at all.

Walter Mott, of the Bobbink & Atkins' staff, was in the city Sunday, after one of his successful eastern trips, and full of enthusiasm as to the outlook. His renewal of old friendships by travel after years of seclusion in Jamestown has added to his health and avoirdupois.

Thirtieth street has about decided to retire from the floricultural field. Several of the faces in evidence there this winter have vanished.

L. B. Coddington's rose output is a daily feature at Horace E. Froment's wholesale depot, in addition to the stock of a host of other growers that keep the big store in a ferment most of the time.

Reed & Keller are making extensive preparations for Decoration day, their new inventions as usual being already in demand.

Igoe Bros., over in Brooklyn, now occupy their immense new factory, where they have one of the most complete wire establishments in America. They utilize three floors of the great building.

Henry R. Crawbuck has a monopoly of the green goods business in Brooklyn and deserves it.

Out on Flushing avenue, Brooklyn, Jacobs & Sons are just completing their splendid three story warehouse for greenhouse material, a convenience that has been long needed to meet the requirements of their constantly increasing business.

The wholesale cut flower business in Brooklyn is also booming. Bonnet & Blake have been adding to their shipments lately and Wm. H. Kuebler has been growing as usual. Both these firms will soon need room at their present rate of increase and the City of Churches has given good evidence that good stock and square dealing are appreciated and needed.

The greenhouse builders are overwhelmed with orders and contracts and, if they may be considered a sign of the times, all your western concoctions of wheat shortage, green bugs and railway competition are but shadows and we are going to have another record year in every department of the business world and in our own in particular. It's a bad method of reasoning, this admission of cycles of hard times that must come again because they have been. Expectancy often creates results. Why not expect and believe that the future has infinitely more of prosperity in store for us than the past? It has.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

The Market.

The continued cool weather prevents the market from becoming overburdened with stock and prices have remained fairly good the last week, with steady trade. American Beauty roses are quite abundant, the best making $25 per hundred. Other roses are quite plentiful and the quality, owing to the absence of hot waves, remains better than usual. Carnations also continue good and bring about the same prices as a week ago. Violets are practically over, although a few doubles are still to be seen. Sweet peas make 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred and are still very good. Liliums and callas are abundant and a little lower in price. A few outdoor Yellow Trumpet narcissi made their appearance this week. There are still quite a few indoor ones arriving. Some good Spanish iris is seen, from several growers, and sells fairly well.

Gladioli are arriving of good quality and make fine prices. Ten weeks' stock does not sell very well and there are more antirrhinums than the market needs. In green stuff there is no great change. The new arrivals of hardy green ferns are appearing and will relieve the scarcity prevailing in this line for some time past.

Various Notes.

Joseph F. Free, manager at the Park Street Flower Market, has sent in his resignation, to take effect March 15. He will act as salesman at the same market for several growers.

Among the many choice flowers seen at the recent club banquet, some magnificent yellow antirrhinums, from William Swan, attracted much attention.

At the same banquet it was good to see some of the veterans "tripping the light fantastic" with gusto. William Miller on the Highland schottische and R. T. McGorum in the Scotch reel deserved special commendation.

There is a pronounced scarcity of florists' and gardeners' assistants in this section. Even at advanced wages they are hard to obtain. The main trouble is that about every young man who has had a year or more of experience in America wants to be a "boss" himself.

Seed merchants are now very busy, but report the season as an unusually late and dragging one, owing to the cold weather.

The special list of prizes for the November show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will be issued in a few days.

April has kept up its reputation this year for cold winds and ungeniality to the very last. The weather bureau pronounced it to be the coldest April on record.

started planting out their stock this week, and planting will be general in a few days.

David Lumsden's purchase of the Varum Frost estate of ten acres in Waverley, with several large greenhouses, will give him a location very convenient to Boston. While palms and ferns will be specialties, much other decorative stock will be grown and a large shipping trade will be done.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The Market.

For a month we have had such cold and dreary weather that cut stock, such a short time ago a glut, is now quite limited in many lines. Especially is this true of carnations, which have some days not been sufficient to go around. Roses of all grades are of better quality than for a long time, and are also, with all other stock, bringing a steadier and better return to the grower. Violets are having quite a good run; in fact, perhaps better than any time this season. Bulb stock is about over, and on the whole both growers and dealers have done better with this class of flowers than for many years. Ever since Easter, plants of all kinds have been sold in large quantities, and good rates have generally been realized. Almost all our florists, besides their regular stores, have stands in the various market districts, where the bulk of the plant stock is sold. On the whole we are doing an all-around good business.

Florists' Club.

A well attended meeting of the club took place Tuesday evening, April 23, in the Brent building headquarters, with Vice-president R. A. Currie in the chair. The topics discussed were the annual field day, a rose and strawberry show, the delinquent member question, and the effect on the trade of closing of Green Lawn cemetery to Sunday burials. Our members are enthusiastic regarding the rose and strawberry show, which will be held June 11, in charge of M. B. Faxon, I. D. Siebert and A. Wedemeyer, as a managing committee. In regard to delinquent members, by good work our secretary has reduced the number materially. At this meeting the display of plants and flowers was especially good. The floral committee awarded seventeen points to R. A. Currie for a fine vase of King of the Yellows and Kaizerkroon tulips. An award of eighteen points was made to I. D. Siebert for some particularly perfect spikes of white and yellow snapdragons.

Various Notes.

The board of trustees of Green Lawn cemetery recently decided that after May 1 no interments will be permitted on Sunday.

The Columbus Floral Co. opened its doors for business at 187 South High street May 1. Mrs. H. D. Jones, owner and manager, is the daughter of Gustave Drobish, of the Cottage Rose Garden, where she has for years assisted her father, and she is fully qualified to successfully carry on her new enterprise. Your correspondent was informed that their stock of plants would be supplied by the Cottage Rose Garden, and that the cut flowers and sundries would be obtained from Chicago dealers. Mr. Drobish, Mrs. Jones' father, is not only the dean of the florists of this city, but also one of the best known members of the craft in this state.

When the Fifth Avenue Floral Co. has the new addition completed, at Sellsville, the plant will include two carnation houses, each 27x400 feet, and one rose house of the same dimensions.

Mrs. E. M. Krauss removed May 1 from 209 South High street to 109 on the same street. Mrs. Krauss reports a continually increasing business, and as this change of location brings her well within the retail shopping district, she should profit substantially by the change.

E. F. Jones has started with bedding plants at his stand on the Central market. As usual, geraniums will be the leaders, in two sizes, at 50 cents and $1 a dozen.

A careful summary of the reports from this section indicates that the cold weather the last month has injured the fruit crop to a considerable extent.

The board of education has purchased thirty-eight sets of garden tools, so that each school building may be equipped for the seed plantings by the children.

Blooming pansy plants at 5 cents each, in paper pots, are this week one of the market leaders.

Graff Bros. made a special push last week with violets. They report large sales at $1 to $1.50 a hundred.

Gustave Drobish has an unusually fine lot of potted roses, in all the best varieties. They bring 50 cents to $1.50 each.

It has been suggested that boxwood sprays may be used in many places where hardy cut ferns have commonly been employed.

THE Rhode Island Horticultural Society has issued the schedule of premiums for the exhibitions to be held at Providence in June, September and November. Copies may be had by addressing C. W. Smith, secretary, 27 Exchange street, Providence.

THE Board of General Appraisers at New York April 22 held that mistletoe stems with the natural berries attached are free of duty as a crude vegetable substance under paragraph 617, tariff act of 1897.

It is interesting to note how many firms do their looking up of credits after payment is due and not forthcoming, when often the slightest inquiry would have revealed that the sale never should have been made except on the cash with order basis.

THE Tarrytown Horticultural Society has issued the preliminary schedule of premiums for its ninth annual exhibition, to be held at Music hall, Tarrytown, N. Y., November 6 to 8. Copies may be had by addressing E. W. Neubrand, secretary, Tarrytown.

THERE are a large number of specimen bay trees known to have suffered considerably during the past winter. The greater number of those damaged were wintered in sheds or other buildings where the atmosphere was invariably dry and sometimes the temperature quite low. Bays will stand a pretty low temperature, but a protracted period in a dry atmosphere is apt to blight the foliage. Damp hay scattered among the tubs will help to retain moisture.

THE question of an adequate and dependable supply of hardy ferns has become an important one with wholesale florists. The number of users of ferns has increased much more rapidly than has the supply and as a consequence most pickers do not seem to exercise as much care as formerly, with the result that the quality of the stock is deteriorating. This spring the ferns coming out of storage are in very poor condition and the chances of wholesalers making a profit on them are remote.

THE DEATH ROLL.

F. W. Cross.

At Wisbech, England, Frederick William Cross died suddenly April 4 of cerebral hemorrhage. He was 43 years of age and widely known for his large interests in the nursery business and in fruit growing. It is said that the funeral was more largely attended than any ever held in the borough cemetery. Mr. Cross left two brothers engaged in the trade: J. W. Cross, a grower of American varieties of carnations at Wisbech, England, and Eli Cross, grower of violets, carnations, etc., at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Mrs. Dorothy Bornhoeft.

Mrs. Dorothy Bornhoeft died at Chicago, April 24, aged 68 years. Her residence was 1164 Maple Square avenue. She was the mother of Henry and Eugene Bornhoeft. Henry Bornhoeft is a well-known florist at Tipton, Ind.

John Cotterill.

It was with a feeling of deep regret that the trade at Toronto, Ont., heard the news, Monday morning, April 22, of the death of John Cotterill, who died of pneumonia after a week's illness. Mr. Cotterill was one of the best-known florists in and around Toronto, having spent his life in the northern part of the city. He was an extensive grower of high-grade bedding plants, and it was always freely admitted that he got the highest price of any wholesaler in the trade there. This may be accounted for by the fact of the good quality of the stock he grew, and by his own personality as a salesman. In the winter time he grew asparagus and bulb stock extensively. The funeral was held April 24 and was attended by a large number of the craft. He leaves a widow and nine children, who have the sincere sympathy of all connected with the trade in and around Toronto. D. J.

GARDENIAS.

The following telegram is received from C. W. Benson, Alvin, Tex.:

"The article on gardenias, under the heading of Seasonable Suggestions in the REVIEW of April 25 is altogether unfair to me. I have several hundred florists on my list, from New York to Salt Lake, to whom I have shipped many years. If shipments were not satisfactory, orders would not continue. Dozens write me every year, expressing complete satisfaction. Our last year's shipments were a half-million buds in orders; no complaints. Please correct editorially in your issue tomorrow and suggest this applies only to inexperienced shippers. The article was intentionally timed and should have been censored, for you know the extent and character of my trade."

The note to which Mr. Benson refers was to the effect that the gardenia, fresh cut from a greenhouse in winter, is not to be compared to the cape jasmine, which "does splendidly out of doors in Texas," after its journey north of a thousand miles or more. However, it is with pleasure that we adopt Mr. Benson's suggestion, for we would not want to be unfair to him—or the numerous other large and experienced shippers of jasmine.

THE READERS' CORNER.

No Sunday Funerals in Detroit.

For a long time ministers of Detroit tried to stop Sunday funerals, finally giving it up as a bad job. About a year ago the hackdrivers' union decided that six days a week were enough and refused to drive on Sundays. A committee was appointed to wait upon the directors of the various cemeteries, persuading them to refuse Sunday burials, to which agreement they have lived up ever since, except in the case of a death from a contagious disease, when they are obliged to bury by order of the board of health.

The effect on the florists' business has been just the opposite to that reported in several recent articles in the REVIEW. With no burials Sundays, those that would naturally fall upon that day are put off until Monday, in most cases. Consequently Monday now is the heaviest burial day. Seventy-five per cent of the people want their orders delivered the day previous to the funeral. This being Sunday, it is easily seen that the florists are kept extremely busy, having to work more hours on Sunday than they did when there were burials that day. H. S.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

There has been no change in the weather and little change in the market situation in the last week. The weather continues to be of the March lion variety and business, all things considered, is excellent. The unseasonable and exceedingly disagreeable weather has resulted in a large increase in the death rate, not only in Chicago but in many other cities that look to Chicago for supplies, and the demand for funeral work is noteworthy heavy. While social activity makes a call for select stock in the rose department, it is the snorts which sell out first and bring relatively the best prices. Buyers will readily give 2 cents to 3 cents for large quantities of short roses, when 8 cents is paid with reluctance for really splendid stock, which is quite abundant. Short red roses, of course, do not share in the prosperity of the shorts in other colors, although short Beauties sell well. The supply of roses is large in all the houses.

The carnation crop is off. Receipts in the last week have been less than in the week before and the carnation market has been stiff throughout. It is pointed out that a year ago at this date carnations were being moved in thousand lots at from $7.50 to $10, while in the last week they have been $2 to $4 per hundred. Opinions vary as to the result to the growers. Some wholesalers say they are not receiving as much money as a year ago, while others aver they are sending their growers larger checks than last year. Some fancy stock brings $5 and the market is well cleaned up every day. Growers say there is no immediate prospect of increase in the crop.

The most active item at present is sweet peas. Everyone wants them and as they are quite abundant, a large business is done. A few violets still are received, but they sell slowly. A little outdoor bulbous stock is arriving from the south, but much of it shows frost marks. Poet's narcissus is coming from Carbon-dale. Indoor bulbous stock is nearly over, only a few white tulips and jon-quils now arriving. Valley is in good demand. There is a large supply of callas, but they are moving quite well because of the demand for funeral work. Easter lilies are more abundant than a week ago.

There is a considerable quantity of such things as pansies, snapdragon, stocks, swainsona, etc. Green goods are abundant, short sprays of southern plumosus selling even better than adiantum.

Second Crop Lilies.

As is well known, Albert Amling, at Maywood, grows a number of roses especially for summer cutting. A year ago he planted a lot of bulbs of Easter lilies between the roses on solid beds and after cutting the lilies, left the bulbs undisturbed. The roses were given a rest and the lilies enjoyed the same respite. When the roses were started up in the fall, the lilies soon showed signs of activity and now there is a splendid crop of thousands in sight for early cutting. Nearly every bulb is stronger than it was last year, five or six buds being the average.

Speculation.

Frederick Sperry, of Vaughan & Sperry, says that speculation is a necessary feature of a brisk market for cut flowers. He says that at present the retailers will not speculate on violets; they will pay a good price for violets when they need them, but they will not touch them at any price unless they have orders to be filled. The result is a poor market for violets. On the other hand, sweet peas are good property and the retailers are quite willing to take a chance; they buy large quantities without having orders, knowing that there is good transient call for them every pleasant day. This willingness to speculate makes a brisk market for sweet peas.

Base Ball.

The employees of Poehlmann Bros. Co. at Morton Grove have organized a base ball team and opened the season April 28 with a game with the Ferns, winning by a score of 11 to 9. The battery for the Poehlmann team was Brigetto and Schultze. The team plans to play leading amateur teams every Sunday.

The growers north of town are many of them interested in the national game. It is stated that N. J. Wietor, of Wietor Bros., is one of the owners of the successful Rogers Park semi-professional team.

Various Notes.

album of the floral arrangements photographed at the show and is offering it for sale to the trade through jobbing houses. At last reports the executive committee had not yet been able to get a settlement from the photographer, so it seems that the Horticultural Society may have a good claim for an interest in the stock of albums now on sale.

When complaint is made as to the lack of variety in stock, H. E. Klunder has nothing to say. In his show window April 27 were arbutus, sweet peas, pussy willows, stocks, forget-me-nots, swainsona, poppies, mignonette, pansies, tulips, daffodils and the all-the-year-around flowers. All these and other items may be had in the market, but not in great quantity.

Theo. Fabricius, who owns a mushroom plant containing 50,000 square feet of beds, in Bowmanville, at Lincoln and Bryn Mawr avenues, plans to give his attention exclusively to the mushroom spawn business.

Henry Hansen, who was formerly associated with his father, Hubert Hansen, in the management of the greenhouses at 4016 North Clark street, has abandoned that business and is learning the carpenters' trade. The father, believing himself too advanced in years to assume the entire responsibility of continuing the business, has offered the greenhouses for sale.

Canger & Gormley are moving from 27 State street to 29 State, the next door south, where they will have a store that is about twenty feet deeper than the old one. Business is good with them and they need the additional space.

Joseph P. Brooks, at Morton Grove, is planting carnations in the field, but most of the growers are holding off, as the temperature was as low as 36 degrees April 29.

The George Wittbold Co. is sinking a well and has bought an electric motor to pump the water that it is expected to find at no great depth. About $50 per month is now paid to the city for water, and a good part of this is expected to be saved when the well is working.

George Reinberg's second car of orchid plants was shipped from Rutherford, N. J., April 29, and will be here the latter part of this week.

C. W. McKellar says the annual crop of Cattleya Skinneri is on, but Mossia at twice the price sells better.

The notice of the demise of Mrs. Dorothy Bornhoeft appears in the obituary column of this week's issue.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has disposed of the carload of boxwood received just before Easter and this week has a second carload in. The stock being of better quality than the first lot, it will doubtless go even faster.

Kennicott Bros. Co. received its first peonies April 27. Old Red now is in small daily supply, with a prospect of early increase with a little warm weather in Missouri. These first Old Red show frost marks, but that signifies little as to the rest of the crop.

Sol Garland, of Des Plaines, was down town April 25 and closed up the deal for the new automobile. It is to be delivered by May 15.

The trade will regret to hear that Edgar Sanders has been under the doctor's care for the last week.

It is stated that Scheiden & Schoos are contemplating planting one of their sections with roses for next season. This year the entire plant has been devoted to carnations.

C. L. Washburn, of Bassett & Washburn, says that Monday's business has been steadily increasing until now Monday is decidedly the busiest day in the week, although it has been brisk every day in the last fortnight.

N. C. Moore & Co. will change their steam heating plant to a vacuum system before time to fire for next season.

Otto Goerisch, of the A. L. Randall force, has been keeping bachelor's hall for three weeks. Mrs. Goerisch is expected home from Burlington, Ia., Friday.

John Evert, who now has eight houses in vegetables, is preparing to plant them all with chrysanthemums for an autumn cut. Last year he had only half his space in mums, but he did so well that he thinks he will double up this year. He has done excellently with lettuce, having fine stock and getting good prices all winter. He now has a crop of cucumbers approaching maturity.

Steve Minor, who has been with the Kennicott Bros. Co. for several years, now has a job at the city hall. His place with Kennicott's has been taken by B. G. Lambros, who formerly was in the retail business here and at Milwaukee.

J. Becker, who bought the Winandy establishment of A. Dietsch, has thrown out all the carnations and says that next season he will plant the entire place with lettuce.

store of the Fleischman Floral Co., is now with A. E. Eley, of Wheaton.

The Foley Mfg. Co. is now nicely settled in its new quarters on Twenty-sixth street and Western avenue.

A. C. Spencer, of Peter Reinberg's, says the business in young stock of roses and carnations is this year about twice what it was last year; but it will be remembered that last year's business was not up to the expectations of the wholesale growers of young stock.

Frank Williams closed Moscoe's old store in the Masonic Temple Tuesday. He still is running the store around the corner on Randolph street and has an interest in the Alpha Floral Co., which recently opened the store at the corner of Madison street and Wabash avenue, so that he has plenty to occupy his energies.

Word comes from Joliet that J. D. Thompson, who recently assumed the management of the new floral department in the Spot Cash Store, has gone to New York for the purpose of buying supplies with which to stock the department.

One of the week's visitors was A. E. Lutey, Houghton, Mich., who recently has incorporated his business as the Lakeside Floral Co.

Among the week's visitors are Wm. Graff, of Graff Bros., Columbus, O.; Wm. Satter, of Ebbsing & Van Groos, Boskoop, Holland; Wm. Dilger, Waukegan, Ill.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

There is not much to say regarding the market and store trade of the last week. The store men report a fairly good trade in all lines, but the customary large wedding decorations which follow Easter are missing this year. There are plenty of smaller affairs. Funeral work has been quite plentiful of late and that helps out greatly. The weather also has had a bad effect on the trade. We have had few pleasant days since Easter, but the month of May should bring warmer and clearer weather. The greenhouse men have been waiting for this kind of weather for planting out, as they have plenty of orders ahead.

At the wholesale houses we find plenty of good roses in all varieties. There are a great many fine, long-stemmed American Beauties coming in, which sell well but at a low price. The lesser grades also are plentiful. In Bride, Maid, Ivory, Carnot, Killarney and Richmond the market has been well supplied almost every day.

Carnations seem to be the scarce flowers in the market; few are coming in, but the scarcity in these extends to other markets as well, as those who have regular shipments coming in daily are trying to buy from the local market.

Callas and Harrisii are slacking up. Lily of the valley is plentiful. These, with a few odds and ends, are all that come to this market daily.

Various Notes.

We have had a number of visitors with us the last week, representing various firms. Among them were Arnold Ringier, with the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, on his way home from the coast.

William C. Young, state vice-president of the S. A. F., will be at the next club meeting to report his work ahead for the next convention. He will also be provided with blank applications for anyone wishing to join the society.

The Foster Floral Co. moved May 1 to its new location at Ninth and Olive streets.

Will Adels, formerly with Mrs. Ayers, made his appearance in the wholesale houses April 29. He has been laid up with sickness since the first of the year; this explains his long absence.

The Riessen Floral Co., on South Broadway, had a number of small hotel decorations last week; also a number of large funeral designs. Their window displays are always attractive.

The trustees of the Florists' Club, Messrs. Smith, Bayer and Weber, held a meeting last week to look over a number of propositions for a fit celebration for the club's twentieth anniversary, which is to take place June 28. It has been decided that it will be a stag affair. A full report will be made at the club meeting.

Henry Braun, late foreman for A. Brix, is taking things easy, visiting the different growers in Clayton and Kirkwood. He reports that on a visit to John Steidle he found his place in fine shape, with fine crops of carnations and roses.

"Billy" Smith had a street car accident last week, which resulted in his remaining indoors a few days. He is now out and about on crutches, attending to business.

Wm. Schray & Sons have a large stock of bedding plants and plenty of orders for planting out. Emil Schray says the weather has kept them back considerably with their work. Others, though, have the same complaint.

The florists near the large cemeteries have been kept busy of late preparing for planting. Fred Meinhardt and the Koenig Floral Co. have the bulk of the work in that district.

Charlie Schoenle, of the Schoenle Floral Co., who has a fine tenor voice, is writing a new song he will sing at the club's celebration next month. The name of the song is "How I Came to Attend the Last Club Meeting," and "Why I'll Never Miss Another."

The St. Louis Florists' Club will hold its monthly meeting May 9 at 2 o'clock, in the Burlington building, 810 Olive street. President Irish will be on hand and expects a full attendance, as several committees will report on important matters. Any member who is interested in the club's welfare should hang his notice in a conspicuous place, so as not to forget.

LILAC CULTURE IN GERMANY.

The raising of lilac plants for forcing from autumn till late spring has not caught on in England as has been the case for twenty years in Germany, and we mostly draw out supplies, as did the Germans formerly, from France. I much doubt if the latter do so to any great extent, at the present day, partly for patriotic reasons, and partly because it has been found that as good material can be grown in their own country as in France, while money is kept at home and employment found for the laboring classes. One of the largest growers, if not the very largest, is Herr F. Sinai, of Frankfort-on-the-Main, who has 150 morgen of land, three-fourths of which is under lilac. In 1891 he had twenty morgen of land devoted to this crop. His chief lilac for forcing (he sells but few plants) consists of seedlings, selecting these by reason of such peculiarities of growth as promise by further cultivation to show valuable features; a method that has resulted in a number of seedlings being raised widely superior to well-esteemed varieties. Besides the seedlings which he raises annually, there are the best of the trade varieties, as Charles X., Marie Legraye, Andenken an L. Späth, Michel, Buchner, Mme. Lemoine, etc., which are grown for forcing purposes, and a number of the Marly lilacs, which in less than four years in the nursery set a good number of flower-buds. These lilacs are grown from suckers, not budded or grafted, and they flower well in balls, and thus save the expensive potting work. Herr Sinai forces 108,000 lilac plants in all, but the demand is not great before Christmas. The plants for that season are placed in the forcing houses on November 27, and these consist entirely of unprepared plants.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Alex Milne is preparing to erect two new greenhouses and will commence at once, so they may be completed by August. One of the buildings will be 30x58 and the other 28x68. They will be devoted to the growing of carnations. Mr. Milne built one new house last year.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The volume of business is a trifle smaller than a week ago; that is, legitimate business. There are probably as many, or more, flowers coming into the market, and most of them find an outlet, but some at such poor prices that they do not go far toward selling the total. The feature of the market from Thursday until Saturday of last week was the continued scarcity of carnations, the prices realized for the best being at times even higher than listed quotations. The first half of this week, however, has shown a decided change in the situation, the receipts of the divine flower being in excess of the demand, with prices easier.

Roses continue fairly plentiful and, thanks to the cool weather, are of good quality. Some double violets still can be had, with indications that the close of this week will see the last of the season's crop. White violets are over. The increase in the receipts of cattleyas is marked, assuring an abundance of choice flowers for the next month. They are a most welcome addition. Valley is in fair demand. Sweet peas are plentiful, with the rank and file improving in quality. The best are very fine. Purple is a welcome addition to the list; lavender and pale pink are becoming more numerous. A novelty reported by the Leo Niessen Co. is Miniature gladioli. Wild smilax is over.

A Question of Count.

It too frequently happens that there is a difference of opinion between the purchaser and the shipper regarding the number of each article contained in a particular shipment. An interesting example of this is reported by M. Rice & Co., who received a complaint regarding a shortage in one of their shipments recently. The firm wrote to the purchaser, stating that the shipment had been checked by three different persons, each acting independently of the others, and requesting that the count be again made. The purchaser replied that he had made the count again, with the same result, a considerable shortage; but on the following day wrote again, apologizing, and stating that the full count had been found. These errors usually arise when shipments are hurriedly unpacked, and could be avoided with proper care.

An Interesting Struggle.

Last Monday nine of the leading private gardeners from the suburbs of this city were invited, by William P. Craig, to visit Forty-ninth and Market streets to examine the new fern, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii. Mr. Craig offered each grower one large plant in a 7-inch azalea pot and two plants in 4-inch pots to be grown under the following conditions: The three plants to be grown for three months, and shifted at the option of the grower, into any size pot or pan desired. Each grower to bring his three plants to the meeting of the Florists' Club to be held in Horticultural hall on Tuesday evening, August 6, each exhibit of three plants there to be judged by the club's committee on awards, with the addition of two fern growers of note. Three prizes in gold are to be awarded to the first, second and third best exhibits, the exhibitor winning first prize to receive, also, his choice of his own three plants, all the other plants to be returned to the owner. Nine competitors entered the list, six in person and three by proxy. They were William Robertson, gardener to John W. Pepper, Jenkintown; Samuel Batchelor, gardener to Clement B. Newbold, Jenkintown; Joseph Hurley, gardener to James W. Paul, Jr., Radnor; Thomas Long, gardener to George W. Childs Drexel, West Philadelphia; John H. Dodds, gardener

Phil paid a flying visit to Robert Scott & Son's place at Sharon Hill, primarily to see Alexander B. Scott, always a great pleasure to Phil, secondarily to see Mrs. Gardine. Mr. Scott was at home, cheery and full of enthusiasm for his work, and gave an hour or more of his time to a stroll over his place, chatting in a way that was an inspiration in itself. But you ask, who is Mrs. Gardine? Is she Mr. Scott's bookkeeper? Not at all. Mrs. Gardine is a beautiful new Irish rose, a seedling of Alexander Dickson & Sons, of Newtonards, near Belfast. Perhaps Mrs. Gardine may be best described as a rose of Bridesmaid size and Killarney color that retains its brightness better than either Bridesmaid or Killarney under trying conditions. Mrs. Gardine is a vigorous grower, producing a profusion of flowers on long, stout stems. When E. G. Hill first saw Mrs. Gardine in the house devoted to testing the Dickson roses, he gave one quick, comprehensive glance and remarked, "Aleck, you have a winner there," and turned away to look at the others. Two houses will be devoted to this rose next season. From these houses the wood will be propagated for distribution in 1908.

Mrs. Gardine has a sister, or a cousin, or an aunt, a beautiful copper-colored bud, which becomes a deep golden yellow when half blown. The petals are long and unusually heavy, the stems stout. This relative, as yet unnamed, will probably come out in 1909, because you see it is as much as anyone can manage to bring out one belle in a season.

The Flowers That Bloom in the Spring.

The parks, squares and private gardens are a blaze of color now. Tulips, hyacinths and daffodils are at their best, giving pleasure to thousands of flower lovers. The display in Fairmount park is the largest in or near this city. Oglesby B. Paul, landscape gardener at the park, and Xavier E. Schmitt, manager at Horticultural hall, have fairly outdone themselves in planning and executing the display. The entire parterre, or sunken garden, stretching from the hall westward to the Belmont drive, is planted with bulbs, chiefly tulips, each bed being devoted to a single variety, 300 or 400 bulbs to a bed. The festoon beds on the sloping sides of the parterre are also filled with tulips, all single varieties. The circles from which the festoons are caught are filled with double daffodils and Narcissus Von Sion. The beds on the east or north side of the hall and in the John Welsh memorial, near Memorial hall, are filled with tulips and pansies. Large beds of La Reine tulips and purple pansies are especially effective. Some idea of the planting can be gathered from the estimated number of tulips in bloom, said to be 200,000. The display is likely to be at its best by next Sunday, May 4.

Various Notes.

J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, was a visitor in this city last week. Mr. Peterson is one of the most progressive of the western growers, whose ideas are full of interest.

home. Miss Crawford received many floral gifts from her father's business friends.

Walter P. Stokes is developing an excellent business in pot-grown tomatoes from his Moorestown greenhouses. The farmers find that they can bring Spark's Earliana into the market by June 20 from plants in pots.

William J. Sherry, of the Johnson Seed Co., is putting life into the whole force by his example.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving purple, lavender and flesh-colored sweet peas in quantity. Cattleyas with them bid fair to last throughout May.

Alphonse Pericat, of Collingdale, is sending choice blooms of Cattleya Mossiae to the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

streets will, on the termination of his lease of the Bunting greenhouses, go into business with his father at Westerly, R. I. This will give Mr. Reuter a splendid opening, as the Westerly place comprises 180,000 feet of glass, a farm of 100 acres, a retail business in Westerly, a retail store in New London, and considerable business from small outlying towns.

Edward Reid received an order over the long distance phone from Virginia last Monday, that required delivery the same evening. This might have phased some wholesalers, but Mr. Reid promptly arranged a schedule and dispatched a special messenger with the flowers.

Southern daffodils have been reaching this market in exceptionally good condition. Indications point to their being over soon.

PHIL.

RICHMOND, IND.—J. A. Evans, of the Quaker City Machine Co., reports that this is one of the busiest seasons to date. April was an especially good month.

COSMOS.

Cosmos is profitable, grown in a locality free from early fall frosts. The seed germinates freely, the plants grow with great vigor, and if the season permits an abundance of bloom may be had in September. An early flowering strain of dwarf cosmos has been on the market for several years and each year there is an improvement in size and color.

Cosmos flowers are borne on long stems in white and red, the latter in several fine shades. The foliage of the plant is fine. Seed should be sown in gentle heat in the greenhouse or hotbed with out loss of time. The young plants should be transplanted when two inches high, being set well down in the soil with at least three inches allowed between plants, as they are likely to become spindly if crowded. When danger of frost is over set them out in a warm, well sheltered position, three feet apart. After the plants start into growth pinch out the tops to induce a bushy growth.

STRENGTH OF CYANIDE.

In the REVIEW of April 18 I again see the formula for the use of hydrocyanic acid gas produced by the use of water, sulphuric acid and cyanide of potassium. This we have repeatedly had set out by the REVIEW, but when I come to the drug store to buy the cyanide the druggist invariably asks me: "What strength do you want?" And there I am; I don't know, because your directions fail to tell us. Now would it not be a good idea for the REVIEW to ascertain what really the proper strength of this stuff should be for this use, and where to send for the same in order to buy it the cheapest? I would like to use it, and I am sure that lots of other florists would do the same, but they are afraid of either overdoing it or not making a success out of it by possibly not getting the gas strong enough.

Thanking you in advance for the information, I wish to enter a word of high commendation for the FLORISTS'

REVIEW, for whom no horn can blow too loud.

H. E. Z.

The REVIEW has many times stated that the formula for the use of hydrocyanic acid gas is based on the cyanide being what is known in the chemicals trade as "ninety-eight per cent pure." It is not an expensive article and it has been advised that the cyanide be bought of the local druggist and that he be asked to wrap it in packages of two and one-half ounces each in two thicknesses of brown paper; that is one package to each jar of water and sulphuric acid.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

At the J. C. Rogers' greenhouses, in Peabody, Mass., where C. Simpkins is superintendent, is a unique collection of standard zonal geraniums, heliotropes and fuchsias. They make a grand showing during the season and as decorative plants cannot be surpassed. A specialty is also made of varieties of the Martha Washington or show type. These are of splendid colors and size. Some handsome specimens of Cattleya Trianae are in full bloom.

J. M. Ward & Co., of Peabody, report the largest Easter business on record. They make a specialty of flowering plants, which are increasing in popularity.

At E. T. Gerry's, in Newport, R. I., under the care of Arthur Griffin, superintendent, can be seen a fine showing of the rare and beautiful Gloriosa, which as a decorative plant cannot be equaled, either for graceful habit or richness of color. Something seldom seen on this side of the pond is a border of Larandula Spica. I met Richard Gardner, who pointed this out to me here. 'Twas like meeting an old friend.

At the E. J. Berwind place, Newport, Bruce Butters is completing what will be the show place of Newport, in addition to possessing an almost complete collection of conifers.

In Warwick, R. I., rapid strides are being made by the Pierson U-Bar folks in the building of a fine range for Senator Aldrich. Supt. Greene says they cannot be built too soon to suit him. We shall see great crops of orchard house fruit grown here. Manager Burke, of the Warwick Greenhouses, who does most of the planting on the island, says he does not remember so late a season for planting. It has helped the nurseryman to catch up with his orders, but the gardener will be late with early vegetables.

As a proof of the hardiness of Azalea amœna, E. W. Clark, of New London, Conn., pointed out a large specimen that has stood several years in a sheltered corner, while hardy rhododendrons near-by were partially killed.

Friends of Rennie & Thomson, of Providence, R. I., will regret to learn that this young firm has been forced to liquidate. The chief reason was unfavorable location. They fitted up an up-to-date place, but it was a case of Mohammed going to the mountain and not bringing the mountain to Mohammed. At present their plans as to the future are not formed. W. M.

HARRISBURG, PA.—The building occupied by John A. Kepner, at 33 and 35 North Second street, is being improved with a new front.

MOBILE, ILL.—Work has been started by Contractor H. C. Quade upon a fine new brick building for William Knees, at 1827 Fifteenth street. It will be used as an office and store and will be modern in every particular. On the same lot Mr. Knees will erect a first-class greenhouse, 27x110 feet.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. M. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE general outlook for the seed growing industry in Germany this season is said to be not encouraging.

AN increase of the radish acreage in Michigan is reported. This will make good in part for decreases elsewhere.

EARLY Scarlet Globe radish is one of the every-day items on the list of the seedsmen doing business with market gardeners.

THE McMillan Seed Co., Atlanta, Ga., reports the largest business in its history this season. The truck farming trade is its principal item.

A SMALL demand for seed of the Globe varieties of onion has developed and an increased demand is expected during the first ten days of May. After that date little demand can be expected.

THE pea and bean growers are not making reports freely, but it is understood that sufficient acreages have been secured for the coming year's plantings and that there is general satisfaction all around.

A SKIRMISH for onion seed in a small way by some of the set growers is a feature of the week. Seed of sixty-five per cent test has been taken and seemingly is considered as good as can be procured.

THE origin of Zvolanek's winter-flowering sweet peas is worrying some of our friends in England. American growers are too well content with the result to spend much time debating on the cause.

WHOLESALE report fill-in business for April not up to the mark, but the increase of March, 1907, over 1906 will still leave a margin of increase favoring 1907 for the full season, if May will do what is expected from it.

W. ATLEE BURPEE, Philadelphia, sails June 1, for Europe, intending to spend three months in visiting the seed growing districts. Howard M. Earle's plans are not yet completed, but the firm will cover its usual territory this summer.

S. GROOT, of Sluis & Groot, growers of seeds at Enkhuizen, Holland, is visiting the trade in the United States. He recently visited the growers on the Pacific coast and reports everyone there making the best of a most unfavorable season.

MARKET gardeners generally have adjusted their plans to suit the freakish weather and are now beginning to call for seasonable seed supplies. It is thought that a sufficient increase in this line during May will make good the April deficiency.

REPORTS as to counter trade and mail trade vary. From some points it is stated that trade in both lines is good; others say business is much less than what it should be. It is the same old story everywhere; the weather has all to do with it and the average of the year will compare favorably with other years.

THE tulip fields in Holland are just in their prime and cable advices to American representatives indicate a fine flowering season. Hyacinths made a good show a fortnight ago. It is stated that the acreage of tulips is somewhat reduced this year.

THE ground is being prepared for planting in the vicinity of Sheboygan, Mich., and as soon as the weather moderates planting will begin. R. T. Edwards, who looks after the interests of Keeney & Sons at Sheboygan, says his firm will plant 600 acres of peas in addition to the acreage contracted with farmers.

THE Barteldes Seed Co., of Denver, has issued a neat booklet entitled "Alfalfa, Its Uses and Culture." In the foreword it is said: "In presenting this little pamphlet we have aimed to encourage still more the culture of alfalfa, knowing that we are giving the best of advice to our friends and patrons, as there is no crop that is so easily raised

THE Weber Seed Co., at Peoria, has a plan of getting business which is, to say the least, ingenious, no matter what one may think of its effect on the dignity which attaches to a well conducted seed house. A local newspaper is carrying on a voting contest to determine who is the most popular young woman in town, giving each new subscriber a certain number of voting coupons; so the seedsmen seek to get the contestants and their

THERE are more encouraging reports as to the prospects for sweet pea crops in the Santa Clara valley.

THE Civic Improvement League, of Denison, Tex., has recently completed a free seed distribution to the children of the public schools.

C. G. Van Tubergen, Jr., Haarlem, Holland, will shortly distribute stock of a new freesia, a cross between refracta alba and Armstrongi. The color is pink.

THE Alaska pea is planted almost exclusively in the south. It is stated this year's acreage is below normal on account of scarcity and increased cost of seed.

THE Ebbert Seed Co., Rocky Ford, Colo., is not a corporation, but is conducted by H. Van Buskirk and R. S. Beall. They have been in business about three years.

CHICAGO:—The onion set growers here are having a hard time in getting their seed planted. The weather is cold, and on the low clay ground the soil does not dry out sufficiently between rains to permit working it up for seeding. There is yet ten days, however, before it will be too late for safe planting and the growers hope that favorable conditions will give them a chance to utilize these days to good advantage.

TRADE IN HOLLAND BULBS.

Murillo tulips are freely selling in England at 60 shillings, Yellow Prince at 26 shillings, La Reine at 24 shillings and so on, and these figures are likely to be considerably advanced in the near future. A much larger demand and the booking of some heavy orders are reported by travelers returning from America. In conversation with a traveler recently returned from Scandinavia I was informed that the sales in that region constitute almost a record and at high prices. And on a recent prospecting journey into the new cultivations recently opened in the north of Haarlem, I found that an immense demand from this new district will be experienced this year. Many acres that have never previously grown anything but vegetables are proposed to be planted principally with tulips. Then again, on account of the high prices likely to prevail in the Holland auction and private sales at home, many of the small firms will not trouble to travel at all, but will rather clear all out at home at an even higher price and in one sweeping sale. It is a generally accepted fact that the larger bulb growing firms are fairly wealthy and not in need of ready money, and therefore many of them, rather than sell their own stock down, would buy in and greatly increase their stock. It is the usual custom in all trades to hold stock when prices are high and values continually going still higher. Consequently, although the actual stock of bulbs held in Holland is probably larger than ever before, the quantity available for export, in comparison with the increased demand, is much below the average.

All these circumstances combined have brought the values up to their present level, and it is probable that, before the end of this year's shipment is in sight, there will be some almost record prices, especially for forcing tulips. The future of the general bulb trade for at least the next four years is probably the brightest it has been for a long time. At the end of that period it is possible prices will come down with a run, unless new markets or an exceptionally increased universal demand shall be sufficient to take the immensely increased stocks which must be on the export market about that time. The same remarks apply also to mangels. Turnips look like producing an average plant, while garden beets and swiss chards have distinguished themselves by coming through well.

Quite two-thirds of our pansy plants, an important item, have perished, while hollyhocks, Bellis perennis, digitalis, etc., have disappeared completely. Myosotis and Campanula Medium have come through all right, and single wall-flowers looked strong up to the end of February, but the east wind has since caused half the plants to collapse. Perennials also have suffered.

Quedlinburg District.

Winter lasted considerably longer than usual, and rendered the sowing and planting of the early articles very late. No work of this kind could be done before March 25, when the weather turned dry and warm. Numerous biennials and perennials that in consequence of the mild autumn were far advanced and looked well up to January 20, were for the most part destroyed by the severe frost the latter part of January, when there was no snow to cover the ground. Spinach and larkspurs were completely killed by frost. Cabbages, kohlrabi, turnips, swedes, leek, parsley, daisies, forget-me-not, pansies, hollyhocks, etc., suffered considerably.

This season's trade, on the whole, may be considered as satisfactory. While prices in general ruled low, an increase of the quantity of the seed sold has been noted in comparison with previous season, and there will be little surplus.

Round-seeded peas did not suffice for the demand, and wrinkled varieties, with leek, parsley, etc., did not sell so well as usual. Onions, except Giant Yellow Zittau, did not cover the demand. Radishes met with an unusually brisk demand. The largest demand was for the White-tipped Rose Turnip, French Breakfast, Ne Plus Ultra, Scarlet Turnip, Long Scarlet, Long Rose, and Long White Icicle, of which the supply, though important, did not nearly cover the demand. Cucumbers, endives, lettuce, parsnip, spinach and some herbs were sold out before the end of the season. Turnips went slowly the first of the season, but the demand increased toward the end. Farm seeds are well cleaned up.

The demand has increased notably for the finer sorts of flower seeds, and many sorts, chiefly the finer asters, did not nearly equal the demand. It has been noted that the Triumph of the Giant pansy, raised and introduced some years ago by Henry Mette, has taken the lead of all pansies hitherto known as among the finest in the world.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.
Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

NURSEYMEN will find much of interest in the weekly department headed "The Pacific Coast."

NELSON BOGUE, of Batavia, N. Y., reports a large season's business, with an especial demand for apple trees, well grown and of the finer varieties.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin, No. 101 of the bureau of chemistry, entitled "The Lime Sulphur Salt Wash and Its Substitutes," which will be of interest to those engaged in combating scale.

BAKER BROS. & Co., dealers in nursery stock and horticultural supplies at Fort Worth, Tex., have incorporated and filed papers with the secretary of state for $40,000 capital stock. The company has an office at 505 Houston street and three divisions of its nursery stock east of the city, at Riverside. J. B. Phia and William J. Baker are the incorporators.

G. CHAMPION, of Toronto, has been appointed park superintendent at Winnipeg, Manitoba. Mr. Champion is an Englishman, was born in 1870, and has had a lifelong experience in the profession in England and Canada. He was apprenticed at Frampton Court, Dorset, England, under T. Pullman, who is now superintendent of Richmond Great Park, Surrey, England.

With the southern, and especially the southwestern, nurserymen the season was earlier and shorter than usual. But with the northern nurserymen it has been longer than the average and especially favorable for handling a large volume of business. The heat wave of April caused alarm for fear that it would start growth prematurely, but the change to

Dreer's Roses for Out-door Planting

THE BEST STOCK PROCURABLE TO SELL TO YOUR RETAIL CUSTOMERS

WE make a specialty of this class of stock. All the plants are field-grown plants which during the winter months have been potted up into 5 and 6-inch pots; they were stored in cold houses and are now breaking into growth freely and are in prime condition to sell to your retail customers for out door planting. This stock must not be confounded with cheap Holland-grown plants, all being either home-grown or imported from England, Ireland or Germany.

Hybrid Perpetual, Moss and other Hardy Roses.

Among two-year-old plants, nearly all in 6-inch pots.

For a complete list of seasonable stock see our current Quarterly Wholesale List—Specialties, Hardy Perennial Plants, Water Lilies, Nelumbiums and other Aquatics, Decorative Plants, Palms, Ferns, etc., Dahlias and other summer flowering Bulbs.

The above prices are only for the trade, and not for the retail buyer.

were excellent. The wholesale nurserymen report excellent clearing out in all departments. They nearly all had a record season, and in a retail way the trade has been equally good. There has been another marked increase in the business done in ornamental stock, especially shrubs. Prices have averaged a little higher than last year. Buyers have been more ready to pay the prices required to insure good stock.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

English Ivy.

There are few things more easily disposed of than English ivy, and usually the price obtained makes its cultivation as profitable as most things grown. English ivy is seldom, if ever, in oversupply and perhaps the reason why so many plants are used is that private gardeners are just finding out to what innumerable uses it can advantageously be put. Some years ago this ivy was used principally in the attempt to cover buildings and for cemetery work. Now there are hundreds of thousands planted every spring in border work and beds.

Ivy will root much quicker in the month of August than later. A good method is to put all the cuttings obtainable in frames to root during the month stated. Root quickly as they will then, they may be potted at leisure. It will be found that cuttings put in in September and October will not only take much longer to root but will fail to make as good stock eventually. When cuttings are put in frames at the time suggested shade will have to be provided in the way of something movable, for when the cuttings are soft they are easily damaged.

Foxgloves.

Foxglove is one of the many good things that will not flower the first year from seed. Seed sown in spring will give good, strong plants for flowering the following year. The seedlings, when large enough to handle, should be transplanted with room enough for them to grow into good, strong plants. A covering of leaves or strawy manure will protect them during the winter. Foxgloves make a gorgeous appearance when in bloom. They are especially effective when planted in masses, but are none the less valuable for planting in the hardy borders and in shrubberies.

Hollyhocks.

When possible, hollyhocks should be grown in pots from the time they are first moved out of the seed flats. They are more easily handled when shipping, and they give better satisfaction to customers than plants lifted out of the open ground or out of flats. Hollyhocks showing signs of rust on the leaves should not be sold or planted. If they are planted, they will never amount to anything. Hollyhock seed should be sown as soon in the autumn as the seed of that season is ripe, and grown on without a perceptible check. If the plants are grown right along moderately cool there is little danger of rust attacking them.

Storage.

There is not the least doubt of the practical value and advantages of a cold storage house in connection with a nursery, and such a house in the spring and early summer would be found especially serviceable to nurserymen who every year are in the way of receiving orders for fruit trees, shrubs and other deciduous trees when it would be too late to ship if the stock had to be dug then, out of the open ground. The utility of a cold storage house, as many are well aware, is by no means confined to the spring sales. Such a house is invaluable for the accommodation of bay trees, hydrangeas and a hundred other things in winter that keep well in such quarters.

R. R.

DEUTZIAS.

For showy blossoms in early summer, few shrubs excel the deutzias. The flower clusters, which are usually white, are displayed so prominently and with such profuse prodigality, springing from the young wood of the previous year's growth, that they are especially desirable for the embellishment of home grounds. The flowers do not last long when cut, but their showy effect, with their gracefully arching sprays, is well worth enjoying. Most of the species respond readily to cultivation in any fairly good soil, when it is well drained. Many of the best kinds are hardy even in the New England states.

Deutzias should be pruned any time after the leaves have fallen, in the late autumn or during the winter. The young wood of the previous year's growth must not be cut back, but the old flowering sprays should be removed and weak, spindling wood and decrepit branches cut out. The plants appear to be remarkably free from the attacks of insect pests.

The National Council of Horticulture says it is unfortunate that shrubs deserving popularity as much as do the deutzias have no simple English name. Deutzia gracilis, a native of Japan, is a low, neat growing shrub seldom over two feet and a half high, with branches slightly arching, from which panicles of white blossoms are abundantly produced. It comes into bloom the first week in June. It is well adapted for planting in the foreground of tall shrubs of similar habit and for massing and grouping at the foundations of buildings, where tall shrubs cannot be used.

Deutzia parviflora is a native of northern China and the Amoor country. It is one of the hardiest species and comes into bloom a week or so after D. gracilis. The corymbs, or convex, flat-tish clusters of white flowers, are produced in great profusion, frequently extending for several feet above the stems. The plant grows from five to seven feet. The upright, stout branches are covered with a brownish yellow bark, which is quite noticeable in winter.

BED FOR CANNAS.

In making a canna bed I have dug the soil out to about eighteen inches deep, filling the bottom ten inches with well-rotted manure, the remainder being filled with woods earth and well-rotted sod. By woods earth I mean rotted leaves, wood, soil, etc., mixed as it is found in a natural state. Please tell me if there is a better compost and what it is.

F. B. F.

It would have been much better to have prepared a compost of well-rotted pasture sod or good garden loam, mixed with well-decayed barnyard manure in the proportion of two of the former to one of the latter. Cannas like a warm, moist and rich soil, but ten inches of solid manure is neither necessary nor desirable and would probably prove hurtful. There is little virtue in what is known as woods earth for cannas. It does well for lightening the soil for small plants in pots, or for ferns, but cannas need something stronger. The compost formed of decaying wood is liable to be full of fungus spores and cannot be recommended for any purpose. Leaf-mold, of course, is invaluable for many plants. We would advise removing some of the manure and substituting more sod and well incorporating the two before planting the bed.

QUINCY, ILL.—F. Wm. Heckenkamp, Jr., will build two new greenhouses this spring, one of them 32x100 feet and the other 14x65.

PACIFIC COAST.

THE nursery of the Santa Barbara Nursery Co., Santa Barbara, Cal., is at Goleta, seven miles west of the city.

A VETERAN.

R. D. Fox entered the field at San Jose, Cal., nearly forty years ago and since that time his nurseries have become known to growers in all parts of the Pacific coast. His nurseries are located at Wayne station, a short distance from San Jose, on the Milpitas road, his sales yard and office being at 153 Park avenue. At present Mr. Fox has 130 acres devoted to fruit and ornamental trees, one of the largest anywhere in the west. He makes a specialty of peach, pear and other fruits and palms. Mr. Fox is said to be the oldest established nurseryman in the entire state.

A DISCOURAGING SEASON

The long continued rainy weather has made a short spring for the plant dealers, and now, with the advent of considerable warm weather, everything has leaped out so freely that the planting season is practically over. I refer here, of course, to stock that has to be handled at a certain season or let grow until another year. March is our best month for retail orders and as at that time we were almost entirely flooded by the incessant rains, we had to wait for April, and by that time the showers ceased, the sun came out in great fury, high north winds blew and in a few days the surface of the ground was baked hard and all the trees were in leaf. This is a repetition of last season's features, and they are rather discouraging to small growers, who do not get much of a chance to dispose of their wares after May 1, with the exception of bedding and soft-wooded stock.

The wholesale nurserymen usually have their season from December to April 1, and the retailers after that date, and although the demand on almost all lines has been heavy, the deliveries in a great many cases have not proven so well.

This has been rather unfortunate, as we experienced the same trouble last year, in which, although the heavy rainfall came earlier in the season, it lasted almost as long, with the same results we had this season. These conditions refer to California in the vicinity of San Francisco, and not either at the extreme north or at the southern portion of this coast.

It is a well-known fact that when a heavy or continuous rainfall is followed by a few days or weeks of dry weather, the surface of the ground hardens on top and rapidly dries out. This, unless given considerable working, finally dries downward for several inches, so that the prospective planter concludes to wait until next season before he improves his garden.

Where the ground is sandy, it does not crust so effectively on the surface, but it dries out just the same and requires much more additional irrigating to put it in order for the growing of plants.

In large grounds and parks, where facilities are at hand to plant at any time, the present climatic conditions do not make much difference, but to the general public, who have to fall back on an artificial water supply with which to keep the ground in order, an excess of moisture when it is not needed, followed by a great excess of hot weather and drying winds when they are certainly not to be desired, can produce only one result, and that is a very much shortened spring season, and a great deal of small stock left on the nurseryman's hands. The Market.

Business is still slow among the retailers and we hold the weather responsible. We have had warm days and cold days, as well as rainy days. Under such conditions stock is not coming in as heavily as it should.

Carnations last week cleaned up fairly well. There was little trouble in disposing of roses, while violets are getting scarce. Bulbous stock still hangs on. American Beauties are well up in supply and sold at a fair price. However, there is little demand for them, except among the street boys, who are offering all kinds of cut flowers at greatly reduced prices. Greens of all kinds are scarce.

Current Comment.

The spring work is now in full swing in every department of horticulture and agriculture. The nurserymen are busy delivering trees and the various other kinds of stock planted at this time of the year. V. A. Vanicek, of the Rhode Island Nurseries, reports heavier demands for April than usual in many lines of stock, especially medium sizes of evergreens and hydrangeas.

Oscar Schultz is building two houses, one 20x100 for bedding plants, and another 30x150 for palms. Mr. Schultz is doing a good business in nursery stock, in addition to his usual trade in general bedding stock.

There is already a noticeable change in the appearance of things at the Newport Nursery, since F. M. Smythe secured control of that property. Waldemar Barth has been retained in the employment of the new owners. Mr. Barth is one of the most versatile of Newport horticulturists and should be invaluable to Wadley & Smythe, considering their varied interests.

James Murray, who is still in the hospital, but is mending, has resigned his position as gardener for Henry Clews, in whose employ he was for nearly twenty years.

Many Newport gardeners are complaining of the small percentage of germination of salvia seed this spring. Bonfire was especially disappointing in that respect.

In Newport the Lombardy poplar is much used in planting because of the rapidity of its effect, and it thrives remarkably well where the salt spray does not reach it, but on one place situated near the ocean, where a great number were planted, they are all dead this spring.

Joseph Leikens, who has a store in the Downing block, on Bellevue avenue, was here last week putting things in motion for resuming business for the summer.

Robert Hunnick is now superintendent of Rough Point for the new owner, W. B. Leeds. There were no greenhouses at Rough Point during its occupancy by F. W. Vanderbilt, but it is understood that Mr. Leeds has intimated his intention of building a range of glass on ground adjacent to the estate on the cliffs.

Among the most magnificent places on the Island will soon be Oakland Farm, the estate of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, in Portsmouth. Mr. Adam, the gardener, has made great changes and improvements lately.

The Market.

There has been little change in market conditions the last two or three weeks. Stock is fairly plentiful, especially roses and carnations, the demand being good, although the storm of last week may have slackened it a trifle. Little salable stock is left on hand. The quality in some cases is a little bit off.

Carnations, some of the growers seem to think, will be coming in more heavily by the end of the week, as it is good stock and is bringing 2 cents and 3 cents. Sweet peas are coming in more abundantly, first-class stock with good stems selling at 75 cents, wholesale. Violets have seen their best days, owing to the warm weather, and are small. A few more days will see their finish.

Beauties are first-class and a good demand for them is noticeable. Growers are throwing out rose plants in both American Beauty and tea sections. Bride and Bridesmaid are particularly fine in quality, while Chatenay and Alice Roosevelt hold their own in fine shape. The funeral demand uses up nearly all of the short stock. Pansies are also in heavy demand and selling well, both blooms and plants.

Lilac is something not to be had on this market and, owing to the last cold spell, it is feared there will be a lack of snowballs and other outdoor flowers for Decoration day, most of them being frost-bitten. There may be some from southern localities where they were not far enough advanced to be nipped when the cold spell came on.

Various Notes.

Ben Boldt is again in possession of the Mud Lake Greenhouses, Mr. Braidwood having turned them back. Mr. Boldt will run both the West Twenty-ninth street houses and the present ones.

WESTERLY, R. I.

S. J. Reuter is a strong advocate of good labor and pays according to its value. This reminds me of a story heard recently that would seem to outdo Jaggs at his best, but 'tis true, nevertheless. One of the stipulations called for in a recent engagement was that the employee should smoke during working hours, to aid in fumigation, and use tobacco that was wrapped in silvered paper, which paper could be saved for the purpose of filling wire designs.

Mr. Reuter says the returns from his advertisements in the REVIEW are very gratifying and have almost cleaned him out of stock, which sounds well, seeing that he has 100,000 carnations in 2-inch pots left, ready to plant out. There are thousands in 3½-inch pots, fine stocky plants, ready to plant into benches. White Perfection is grown in large numbers, but Queen Louise is considered the best commercial white today. Lawson, both pink and white, succeeds well in the old range, as free as ever. In roses, Killarney has produced the best returns this season. Kaiserin has been in crop from November and is now throwing heavy canes. Owing to Killarney and Wellesley being grown in the same house, it was not rested beyond keeping dry for about six weeks, which has benefited it. Chatenay is the only variety that is grown on own roots. Bride, Maid, Killarney and Wellesley are grafted, grown one year on benches, then planted in solid beds and run for two and three years, giving excellent returns.

Mr. Reuter's new house, 35x500 feet, will be planted, when finished, with the kinds mentioned. The purlin pipe is also used to carry the water supply; this plan is adopted in all the modern houses and works well. Large numbers of bedding stock are grown to supply the big demand at Watch Hill and near-by summer resorts. The Whitmani fern is considered one of the finest for cutting, but not a good pot plant, as it breaks out from the center. Ficus pandurata stands the sun and makes a handsome addition to subtropical bedding.

A western manure spreader is used upon the land and is considered a perfect machine, soon saving its cost, in addition to doing the work thoroughly. Outdoor planting of carnations began April 29. W. M.

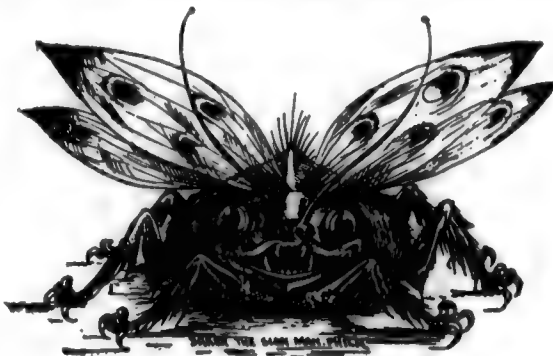

SAULT STE. MARIE, MICH.—The Priest Garden Co. has been organized here, with E. F. Priester at its head. The company will conduct a general nursery business.

The Bee is the first that takes advantage of the Great Work that Godfrey Aschmann, the never resting florist, with the assistance of his three grown-up, wide-a-wake sons, John, Edward and Howard, and together with his faithful employees, have done since Easter. Just think! Everything nearly empty at Easter and now, now, look now, only four weeks have elapsed and such an immense stock ready to put on the market. Can it be possible? No wonder the bees enjoy their lives in Aschmann's greenhouses. Just look how they are swarming. "Oh, Aschmann's flowers taste so sweet," the bees say. "We cannot stop; we have a big field to work on; 100,000 of the choicest plants; every nook and corner full; let us harvest." Secure Bargains now and for Decoration Day.

The Market.

A week of the best weather we have had in a long time has not as yet made its effect known on the quantity of stock coming into this city, but there ought to be something doing in that line before long, especially if this kind of weather holds out. It is so much warmer, and we have had so much more sunshine, that it surely ought to bring more flowers. Business is still first-class and if it will but hold out for a few weeks longer, we will be more than satisfied. The way it has started off this week would indicate that the end is not in sight, for a while, at least. The general scarcity of all varieties of flowers still tends to keep the prices up, and in some instances they were boosted again last week. Roses continue fairly equal to the demand, but when it comes to carnations it is another story. There are not enough of them to come anywhere near taking care of the demand. And what is worse, from the reports of many growers it would appear that there will not be many of them for some time to come.

Green goods of all kinds are in demand and good ferns are scarce, as the cold storage supply is about used up. Smilax is also scarce, but there is a fair supply of Asparagus plumosus strings.

Various Notes.

Chas. Knopf, of Richmond, Ind., is sending some fine Richmond and Liberty to this market. The pick of them find a ready sale at $1.50 per dozen.

W. K. Partridge is in with a fine cut of roses, and he is one of the few growers who have a good crop of carnations in sight, to be harvested soon.

E. G. Gillett was in Springfield, O., Monday.

Martin Reukauf, of Bayersdorfer's, Philadelphia, was a caller.

C. J. OHMER.

MANSFIELD, O.—Peter Ott, who has his headquarters here, is the chief florist of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad lines west of the Ohio river.

SAGINAW, MICH.—The Wm. Roethke Floral Co. is setting an example by embellishing the grounds around its place at Michigan and Adams streets. The public seems to take much interest in the landscape work that is being done and the prospects are that as an advertisement it will be a winner.

The Market.

This week has started in with a good, old-fashioned, warm spring day, which will undoubtedly bring stock along; and it is needed, as business showed considerable improvement the last week and the wholesale houses cleaned up every day at fair prices, with a shortage on carnations every day. Roses also showed an advance in prices.

Various Notes.

On Thursday, April 25, one of the worst storms experienced in this vicinity struck our city and reached out in the direction of Bakerstown, where it overturned wagons and moved a barn from its foundations. The Pittsburgh Rose and Carnation Co. had some damage in the way of broken glass, but Mr. Burki says that for a time he looked for some of the houses to go down.

The plantsmen are getting busy, and in one instance a grower said he had one order to plant at once. However, he said he expected to have that order to replant, as is usually the case if planting is done as early as May 1 in this vicinity.

Walter Carney, of J. B. Murdoch & Co., is the proud father of a twelve-pound boy, their first. He is accepting congratulations and passing out a good brand of cigars.

Ed McCallum, of the Pittsburgh Florists' Exchange, is getting up a party to go camping in Michigan in vacation time.

W. C. Beckert, the seedsman, is up against the real thing. The late season held things back and this hot spell is pushing them to the limit, working night and day.

Frank Faulk is just getting over an illness.

H. P. Joslin, the hardy plant specialist, has started for the season with the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co. He is now cutting fine narcissi and expects to have Spanish iris in a short time.

Hoo-Hoo.

PEKIN, ILL.—The pupils of the Mission Sunday school, who are soon to engage in a flower contest, listened Sunday morning, April 21, to an interesting talk by E. B. Alexander on the preparation of flower beds and the cultivation of plants. The seeds and prizes for the Mission contest are furnished by the Outdoor Art League. The flower beds are to be four feet in diameter and prizes of $2, $1 and 50 cents will be given for the best display of flowers by each family. There will also be special prizes.

Vegetable Forcing.

THERE were heavy snow flurries in the Chicago market gardening district April 25.

WILL some reader please tell some of the reasons why Grand Rapids lettuce seed from the same lot produces such variable results, even when planted for successive crops by the same grower?

No vegetable seed will decay quicker than beans, and the delay caused in waiting for the soil to become warm and free from excessive moisture will be more than made up by the rapidity of growth when they are finally planted.

THE lettuce growers in the vicinity of Chicago have had an excellent season. Good lettuce has brought uniformly satisfactory prices, and the market has thus far suffered less than usual from the competition of outdoor stock from the south.

THE cold weather of April ruined a large part of the crop of radishes in open ground the growers in the warm, sandy loam north of Chicago usually have ready for market by this date. They did not replant, as the crop would come in with the later product on the heavy land back from the lake.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, May 1.—Cucumbers, 75c to $1.10 doz.; leaf lettuce, 45c to 50c case; mushrooms, 40c to 50c lb.

BOSTON, April 29.—Cucumbers, $3 to $7 box; tomatoes, 35c to 40c lb.; mushrooms, $1.50 to $2.50 per 4-lb. basket; radishes, $1.50 per hundred bunches; beets, $1.50 to $1.75 doz. bunches; carrots, 30c to 60c doz. bunches; lettuce, 60c to $1.50 doz.; romaine, $1 doz.; escarolle, $1 to $1.25 doz.; rhubarb, 5c to 6c lb.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Beet greens steady. Cucumbers selling fairly at former prices. Lettuce in good demand and firm. Mushrooms quite plenty and tone easy. Mint scarce. Radishes dull and weak. Rhubarb easier. Tomatoes weak. Beet greens, 75c to 85c bu.; cucumbers, 50c to 85c doz.; lettuce, 75c to $1.50 doz.; mushrooms, 15c to 60c lb.; mint, 75c to $1 doz. bunches; radishes, $1.50 to $2 per hundred bunches; rhubarb, $3 to $6 per hundred bunches.

FORCING LETTUCE.

More failures in growing lettuce under glass can be traced to unsuitable soil than any other one cause. A good soil for lettuce should be rich, mellow turfy loam and of a somewhat sandy character. Head lettuce requires a lighter soil than the loose or leafy varieties. All heavy clay soils should be avoided. A good compost for lettuce is composed of three parts of well-rotted sod mixed with one part of thoroughly rotted cow or stable manure and enough sand to make it gritty.

As to beds, lettuce can best be grown in solid beds because the moisture can be maintained more uniformly at the roots, also the temperature of the bed is always cool. Where benches only are available we must make the best of it. To grow the first crop, or that which comes into maturity about Thanksgiving, will take from eight to ten weeks. The crop that comes in about midwinter requires two to four weeks longer. Various sowings must be made to keep up a steady supply. Make a sowing every ten days or two weeks and transfer the young plants to the bed as space is afforded.

The most profitable variety to grow will depend entirely on the market available. It is difficult to give advice as to the best varieties, as conditions vary widely in different sections of the country. If head lettuce is required, Boston Market still holds its own. If loose or leafy lettuce is wanted, Grand Rapids is the one most generally grown.

SIZE OF GREENHOUSES.

Is there any difference in time of growing a crop of lettuce in a wide greenhouse, with side walls five or six feet high, and fifteen or sixteen feet to the ridge, as compared with a house eighteen or twenty feet wide, with side walls two and one-half to three feet high and six or seven feet to the ridge, on solid benches? If there is any difference in time or in quality of crop, what is it?

E. B.

I do not consider that the size of the greenhouse makes any material difference in the time required to mature the crop, providing that the houses have an equal amount of light. If either of the houses is darker than the other, then the lighter house would have the advantage, light being the most effective agency in controlling the growth of the crop. In the lighter house your crop would probably mature several days earlier. Given the same amount of light, the only other advantage would be with the larger house, in having more air space; this would make it less susceptible to sudden fluctuations of temperature, the larger body of air not being so easily heated or easily cooled.

METHOD OF FORCING MINT.

Please tell me the best method of forcing mint. What is the best variety, and the best method of propagating and storing?

F. W. H.

The variety generally used for forcing is the common peppermint, or Mentha piperita. This can be raised from seed, but the quickest means of propagation is by division of the roots. The plants produce numerous creeping stems, and if left undisturbed for a few years can only be lifted in large clumps, which are inconvenient to handle for forcing purposes. So, when forcing is contemplated, it is best to prepare the plants by dividing in spring. Use clumps about three inches in diameter and plant one foot apart in the rows, with the rows far enough apart to allow freedom to cultivate. These clumps will make a nice growth during the summer, but will not run far enough to run into one another, and in the fall can be lifted individually and set in the benches. A house with a minimum temperature of 45 degrees suits it best, as it won't stand hard forcing. With ordinary care, will keep on producing the whole winter through.

There is no need for storing, unless it be that space can't be devoted to in the earlier part of the winter, which case it could be covered over the ground with some litter or other material sufficiently heavy to prevent the ground from freezing, so that could be dug up as required.

the level of the ground. The house will be even-span, with side walls four and one-half feet high, and with four benches. F. L. T.

If the house is to be in a comparatively sheltered location, eight lines of 4-inch pipe should be sufficient to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees during the coldest weather in your Michigan climate. It would be desirable, however, to have at least ten lines of pipe, five along each side and running part way across the end of house not protected by the potting shed. L. C. C.

STEAM OR HOT WATER HEATING.

Which is the better system of heating a greenhouse, steam or hot water? I want to install a boiler and am at sea as to which to get. I have two houses, one 20x75 and the other 12x60, with 4-foot walls and 7-foot ridges. Would I require as much pipe for steam as I would for hot water? The average temperature here (state of Washington) last winter was 12 degrees above zero, the coldest it has been for years. I cannot very well use a pit, for the water is too near the surface; so I would have to place the boiler on the surface. One house stands east and west, the other north and south, on the sides of a square. C. J. J.

The only satisfactory method for heating your houses will be by means of hot water. Secure a boiler of a low, horizontal type and set it just as low as possible. For the 20-foot house carry a 2½-inch flow pipe from the top of the boiler along under the ridge of the house to the farthest end; then drop below the benches or along the side walls and divide into eight 2-inch returns, four on each side. For the 12-foot house provide one 2-inch flow pipe and six 1½-inch returns. The expansion tank should be lo-ated at the highest point in the system, which should be just over the boiler; from this point the pipes should have a gradual fall of about one inch to every ten feet of their length, finally terminating in a vertical drop and all connecting into the bottom of the boiler. The flow pipe for each house should be provided with a gate valve to check the flow of water in case it is desired to run one house cool and the other warm. One valve to each house will be sufficient.

The first cost of the piping for steam will be less than for hot water, but under your conditions steam would be impractical on account of the position in which your boiler must be set. L. C. C.

PIPING FOR MINNESOTA.

I expect to build a house 20x60 feet. Would the following system of water heating be satisfactory in Minnesota, where the temperature sometimes reaches 30 degrees below zero? The boiler will be at the west end. The system would consist of one 4-inch flow pipe from the dome of the boiler, rising to the top of the door at the extreme end and branching into fourteen 1½-inch return pipes which run under the benches. The end of the house nearest the boiler is to be warmer, and in order to secure this greater warmth I have planned to have four of the pipes branch at this end of the house, which would be separated from the rest of the house by a partition. Would one flow pipe supply these returns, or are there too many of them? If there should be more flow pipes, where should they be? And if this plan is not right, what would you suggest? The wall is eight feet on the north, with no glass, and six feet on the south, with two feet of glass. Are these sizes of pipes all right?

N. N. C.

The plan of piping suggested will provide sufficient heat for carnations, chrysanthemums and similar plants, but for roses it would be desirable to increase the number of 2-inch pipes to eighteen. The 4-inch flow pipe will supply the fourteen 2-inch returns, but no more. As the water will be considerably cooled by the time it returns to where the extra pipes branch off, they will add little to the warmth of this section and this part of the house will be inclined to be coolest. A better plan would be to insert a tee in the 4-inch flow pipe just before the partition is reached and connect directly to the extra return pipes below the benches. This connecting pipe, however, should be provided with a gate

I should like to get a little information in regard to greenhouse heating. I had a boiler put in last fall for hot water. My houses are one 18-foot house in center, with a 10-foot house on each side, running north and south, with a shed at each end. The boiler is in a pit at the north end, with its top two feet below the greenhouse floor. A 4-inch pipe feeds a header under the outside bench in each outside (10-foot) house. Each header feeds four 2-inch pipes running under the outside bench to the south end, where one of these 2-inch pipes is carried through to the center house and returns through it. This is one man's experience:—

W. D. SNELL, Mohawk, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1907, says:— "I have to report in regard to the No. 407 Standard Sectional Steam Boiler recently installed in my greenhouses, that it gives thorough satisfaction. About January 1, I had occasion to note an incident that I consider worth reporting. The boiler was attended to, fuel furnished, grate shaken down and everything arranged for the night at 12 o'clock midnight. At that time the boiler showed two lbs steam. To test the boiler and see how long it would run without attention, I deferred giving it any further attention until 11 o'clock the following day. At that time the fuel needed replenishing, but steam had been maintained in the system practically all the time and at the time it was replenished, the gauge stood at two lbs. pressure. The experiment showed that the boiler ran without any attention whatever for eleven hours, carrying 7000 sq. ft. glass to about 55 degrees. The weather outside was about zero."

There seems to be a good circulation. The pipes rise at the rate of ten inches in each eighty-five feet, and the fall in returning is ten inches. A. M. S.

Water at high temperature parts with its heat more quickly than at a lower degree of heat, and for this reason the flow pipes at the north end of the 10-foot houses have a greater efficiency than at any other point in the houses. The easiest method of correcting the present difficulty will be to decrease the number of flow pipes and increase the number of returns correspondingly. Under each bench of the 10-foot houses place one flow pipe, to divide at the south end into two returns. This will provide for two flow pipes and four returns, in addition to the run which passes through the wall into the middle house. This pipe passing from one house to another is objectionable and could safely be changed so as to act as a return in both houses. This would provide for two flows and five returns in each of the 10-foot houses and four flows and six returns in the middle house. This arrangement will require manifolds for connecting the flows and returns at the south end. At the north end the returns should be fitted with elbow joints to provide for variation in expansions. L. C. C.

FLows FOR HOT WATER.

I propose to erect three greenhouses, north and south and side by side, each 16x100 feet and twelve feet to the ridge. I will pipe them for hot water, with the boiler in a shed at the northwest corner. According to my plan I would have just one flow, which would be placed under the ridge in the west house and would supply returns in the whole plant. What size of flow and what size and number of returns do I need to keep the temperature at 50 to 60 degrees? The temperature here, in the state of Washington, is never known to go below 9 degrees above zero. If I should not be able to erect more than the west house for the first winter, would it be necessary to have a smaller flow until the whole plant is up? C. H.

A 3½ or 4-inch overhead flow pipe will be required to supply the three houses, but it would be much more satisfactory to run a 2-inch flow pipe through each house, with a 4-inch main in the potting shed. The main return pipe connecting to boiler will necessarily be the same size for hot water heating as the main flow pipe. The large flow and return can be used with only one house.

With a 4-inch flow in the west house, this house will require six lines of 2-inch pipe as returns. The middle house will need six lines of 2-inch and the east house eight lines of 2-inch pipe. If a 2-inch flow were run through each of the houses, the middle one would require five 2-inch returns and each of the outside houses seven 2-inch returns. All pipes should be graded to a uniform fall of about one inch every ten feet, the drop being toward the bottom of the boiler. The expansion tank should be located at the highest point in the system, which is usually just over the boiler. The piping of each house should

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club, held May 1, was an unusually good one. All the first-class florists are now enrolled.

The Miami Floral Co. will add another large house to its plant this summer. Some fine Richmond and Beauty have been shipped lately.

The Advance Floral Co. will add one house, 28x110, for carnations, also a small house for violets, and another, 10x36, for forcing bulbs, etc. Business is showing a healthy increase over last season.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The weather the last week affected business to a considerable extent. The first few days trade was very fair, but the heavy snowstorm the latter part of the week shut off business entirely. Consequently a great deal of stock is on hand which is not altogether fresh. This will affect the market to some extent, and it is probable that roses especially will take a drop. It is now warming up considerably, so we may expect the street merchants and the department stores to get busy. The quality of the roses at the present time could not very well be improved, especially Richmond and Killarney. Special blooms are offered at from $8 to $12 per hundred, which is as much as they have brought at any time so far this season. Brides and Maids are also good, present quotations being from $6 to $8 per hundred. Carnations, home grown, have dropped a little, selling at $1.50 and $2 per hundred, while good blooms from outside markets are billed at $3 and $4 per hundred. None of the trade have experienced any difficulty in getting good stock, and the retail prices have kept up nicely. With the exception of a few special sales, there has been no disposition to lower prices.

Planting season has been delayed to some extent, on account of the heavy snowfall; also the trade that handle nursery stock have experienced a slight setback, as there has been no planting whatever done.

St. Paul.

Colberg & Lemke have dissolved partnership. Mr. Lemke will continue the business, while Gust Colberg will go with Holm & Olson.

It has been expected that the assets of Robert C. Seeger, consisting of a fine ice-box, would be sold at auction, but on account of Mr. Seeger filing a petition in bankruptcy it is doubtful what action the court will take. A number of the florists appear to be interested and would like to have the opportunity of bidding

Holm & Olson are advertising landscape work extensively. They have employed a landscape man to look after that department and they are also doing something in the nursery line. Cut flower trade, especially funeral work, they report as heavy.

L. L. May & Co. had a heavy week, funeral work appearing to be the main issue. The retail seed business opened up in good shape, but the snowstorm put a damper on it for a few days. DETROIT.

The Market.

The weather remains unusually cool, but has been much more pleasant than during the previous week. The heavy run of funeral work still keeps up, draining the market of all short stock, especially white. There is little doing in the way of wedding flowers, but inquiries as to prices are being made more frequently, and some of these inquiries will, we hope, soon materialize as orders for decorations. The few orchids available in this market seldom go to waste.

Roses are arriving in good quantity. The stock is fine and speedily picked up, excepting short reds. Prices range from 3 cents to 8 cents.

Carnations are of fine quality and the large shipments are usually sold in advance. About the only plants going to waste are daffodils. Some good ferns, this season's pick, are arriving at the commission houses. Smilax is still at a premium. Where formerly a foot was thrown in it is counted up to the inch now.

Various Notes.

Much interest was manifested by the Detroit public in the lecture on "Home Garden Work and Civic Improvement," as delivered at Harmonie hall May 1 by E. R. Thomas, of Welfare League, National Cash Register Co., Dayton, O. Mr. Thomas deserves much credit for the excellent manner in which he handled this subject. President Wm. Dilger, of the Detroit Florists' Club, under whose auspices the lecture was held, introduced Secretary J. F. Sullivan, who, after delivering a short address as a preliminary to the lecture, in turn introduced Mr. Thomas. The daily papers were generous in the space devoted to advertising the affair, publishing all the copy supplied by the press committee. A number of posters were also distributed among the stores, for displaying in the windows, so there was a good attendance.

Louis Charvat, of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, was laid up with a severe cold last week.

William Dilger spent several days last week at the Cincinnati Zoo in connection with his duties as park superintendent.

Ferdinand Beyer, the hustling young head gardener at the Wayne County House, is contemplating the growing of violets as a side line. There is a rumor afloat that Ferdinand is soon to join the benedicts.

Herbert Pierce, manager of the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House, is again back in harness after three weeks' illness.

The Memorial day business in Detroit is of such little account that there is little need of making any special preparations in the cut flower line. The only florists who are busy are those located near the cemetery entrances. H. S.

I paid more for the article and got left on it. It was more like sawdust than anything else. Now I am coming back to you.

Yours truly
 C. E. Stevens.

Say, Stevens, we would sure like to know from you and others like you "why you stray away" to folks who don't know tobacco powder from sawdust. We have been telling you and others in a hundred different ways how smart we are in the way of tobacco powder; that we have been in the tobacco powder business for twenty years, and why our tobacco powder should be and is, twenty years AHEAD OF ALL OTHERS. Again we ask, why you let the fellows that don't know, skin you, who should know, that the BLACK STUFF FINE TOBACCO POWDER, for dusting, at 2c. per pound, in our bag holding 100 pounds, with our name, address and brand on each bag, sold only by us, direct to you, is the only one. WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

The Market.

Trade during the last week has been better than in the first part of April, but with the heavy quantities of stock coming in it is difficult to clean up. Fortunately for the others, a few of the growers are short on carnations, on account of the great number of cuttings taken off. This helps to keep the supply lower than it otherwise would be, but still there is a great deal of stock that is looking hard for a purchaser. Bulb stock has not been as plentiful as it was and consequently is cleaned up better. Violets are done. Sweet peas are in good supply. The Georgetown Floral Co. is sending in some fine stock, with stems from twenty to twenty-four inches long.

The cold weather has held back the bedding plant trade, and has also retarded outdoor vegetation, so that those who handle bedding plants expect to have everything in a rush when it does come.

Death of John Cotterill.

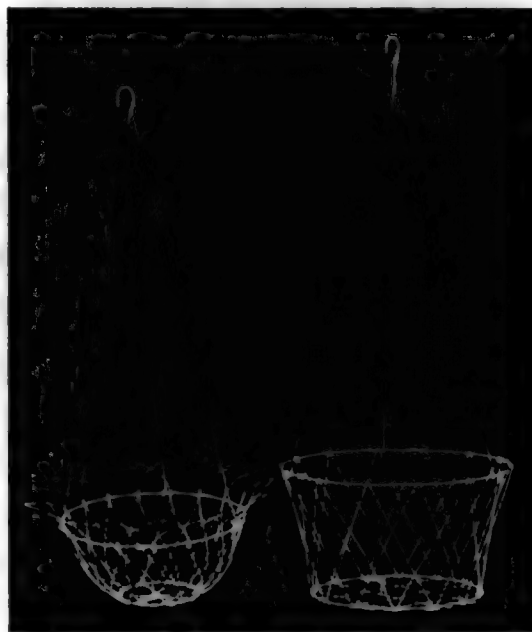

It was with sincere regret that the members of the trade heard, April 22, of the death of John Cotterill, concerning whom further particulars are given in the obituary column of this issue.

because a concern talks best of materials, that they of course mean the right thing for the right place—but you are way wrong. For instance: When anyone talks wooden eave plate and wooden posts, they are trying to sell you something that the man who cares anything about reducing the shade or saving himself from almost immediate repair bills—will have nothing to do with. The men who have given this thing hard thought, and then tried their thinks out by spending money to save money, have long ago proven that the Iron Frame House with our galvanized steel eave is the house to buy. EXPRESS RATES

ORDERED CUT

Interstate Commission Upholds Florists.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, at Washington, May 4, rendered a decision in the matter of the protest of the Society of American Florists against the rates charged by the United States Express Co., for carrying cut flowers from New Jersey and Pennsylvania points to New York City. The commission holds that the rate now in force is unreasonable and orders that it be materially reduced after June 15.

The case is of special interest to growers for the New York market, as materially affecting their daily expenditures, but it is of importance to the whole trade in that it indicates the attitude the Interstate Commerce Commission will take on the claim that special remuneration is justified by the special service and extra expense involved in handling cut flower shipments—it will head off increases in rates in other sections of the country and teach the express companies that might no longer makes right, or if it does, the might now is in the hands of the people. Incidentally, the decision will attract the attention of the whole country to the flower business, for this is the first case under the new law in which a decision has been rendered as to the reasonableness of an express rate.

The case was brought in the name of the Society of American Florists, which claimed that the rate charged by the United States Express Co. on cut flowers from New Jersey and Pennsylvania points to New York City was unreasonable, excessive and unjust. This rate till May, 1906, was 50 cents per hundred pounds, and at that time was raised to $1 per hundred pounds.

Company's Contention.

The express company defended its increase of 100 per cent in its rate by claiming that the delivery service given cut flowers in New York is much more expensive than that given other articles, and that it could not increase its rate a sufficient amount to meet the expense of this special service without largely increasing the total rate, because of its contracts with the railroads under which it is required to pay a percentage of its gross receipts to the railroad companies for their service. It was set forth that the United States Express Co. has contracts with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad by which the railroad receives forty-five per cent of the total gross receipts of the express company; but the commission found that the service rendered by the railroad is no greater or different under the new rate of $1 than it was under the old rate of 50 cents; that the railroad now receives forty-five per cent of the $1 rate, namely, 45 cents per hundred pounds; that prior to May 1, 1906, the railroad received but one-half of said amount for the same service; that the percentage of gross revenue paid by the express company to the Central Railroad of New Jersey is forty-three per cent, and to the Lehigh Valley Railroad forty per cent; that the United States Express Co. employs agents at the points of origin concerned, who are, generally speaking, paid for their services in gathering, billing, loading, unloading and delivering express matter with a percentage of the gross receipts at such offices, which percentages range downward from twenty per cent.

The Decision.

Commissioner Lane, who prepared the decision, said:

"Elaborate tables have been presented by the defendant tending to prove that the former rate of 50 cents was unremunerative, owing to the percentage which it paid to the railroad, added to the percentage which it paid to its agents and the cost of delivery in New York. From these same figures it can also be adduced that the present rate of $1 is unremunerative; and it may well be said that from an analysis of the charges made upon any single commodity or class of commodities transported by this company a similar result could be arrived at.

"In order to increase its business the express company gives an especially prompt service to flower raisers. There is no evidence that this is not done by all express companies, or that it does anything with respect to this traffic which transportation companies do not generally do as to certain classes of perishable freight. But, admitting that an extra return should be made over and above that received for the carrying of articles generally transported by express, no reason has been shown why the railroad charges and agents' pay should be doubled, excepting that the express company has to pay double the amount under its contract to its agents and to the railroad company—a necessity or condition which we cannot recognize as controlling as to rates."

The New Rates.

The order of the commission requires the United States Express Co. to cease and desist from charging the $1 rate after June 15 and directs the express company on or before that date to put in a 60-cent rate from Chatham and Somerville, N. J., to New York City, a 72-cent rate from Allentown, Pa., to New York City, and from Philadelphia, Hillside and Dorranceton, Pa., a 90-cent rate.

The order also directs the reduction on rates on empties from New York City to the points named to the merchandise rate of 50 cents per hundred pounds.

History of the Case.

It was October 9, 1906, that the secretary of the Society of American Florists filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission the petition setting forth "That in the course of their business members of the S. A. F. located at various points in New Jersey and Pennsylvania make shipments of flowers from such points to the city of New York. That quick handling of these shipments is so essential, that the use of defendant's express line, even at higher rates than those of railroad companies, has been and is absolutely necessary. That on or about the first day of May, 1906, defendant arbitrarily and unjustly increased its express charges on flowers from the points named to New York City. That the following table shows the places, the express charges prior to May 1, 1906, and the advanced express charges of defendant, in cents per 100 pounds:

From.	Charges prior to May 1, 1906.	Charges since May 1, 1906.
Somerville, N. J.....	50c	$1.00
Chatham, N. J.....	50c	1.00
Allentown, Pa.....	60c	1.00
Philadelphia, Pa.....	75c	1.00
Hillside, Pa.....	75c	1.00
Dorranceton, Pa.....	75c	1.00

"That said advance in charges by defendant was altogether unwarrantable and unjustified by the circumstances of the case, and the present charges are unjust and unreasonable of themselves and generally. That complainant's members at said points are willing to pay express charges largely in excess of what carriers by railroad would be likely to charge on such commodity between the same points, but it alleges that the above-named advanced rates are so unjust and so much in excess of what they should be that their exaction is nearly ruinous.

"That prior to May 1, 1906, the empty boxes or cases which contained the flowers were either returned free or at a nominal charge by defendant, from New York City to said points, but that since said date defendant unreasonably exacts the same charge per 100 pounds for the return of the empties as it exacts for the flowers themselves. That this additional burden placed by defendant on such shippers is unjustified and should be changed.

"That these flower shipments are, in a majority of cases, delivered by complainant at the railroad stations, and the defendant is not required to call for them at the greenhouses. That the markets in New York City are bunched in a circumscribed area, so that in cases of delivery to places of business defendant is not required to cart shipments long distances. That the express-carriage of flowers does not call for any special service other than promptness of delivery, and much of the cost which defendant has to assume in collecting and delivering ordinary merchandise is eliminated."

The Society of American Florists appeared before the interstate commerce commission at Washington Friday and Saturday, March 15 and 16, at the time of the meeting of the Rose Society. Some twenty or twenty-five officers and members of the society were present and evidence was offered by Frank L. Moore, Chatham, N. J.; L. M. Noe and Robert Schultz, Madison, N. J.; Adolph Farenwald, Roslyn, Pa.; F. H. Traendly, New York City, and W. J. Stewart, Boston. Two hours and a half were consumed in presenting the evidence. On the following day representatives of the express company presented their side of the case. The judgment of the commission now is rendered. There is no appeal.

It will be noted, however, that the decision was largely on a technical ground, concerning the railroads' contract, not touched on in the S. A. F. petition.

ORGANIZATION OF A MODERN ESTABLISHMENT

The Early Organization.

The consideration of this subject lends more interest when we compare the aggressive modern establishments of the present time with those of thirty or more years ago. Then, in the absence of the enticing catalogue and the undreamed of trade papers, the growers' chief aim was to have a full supply of salable plants in bloom at the opening of the spring season.

The stock consisted of all the then known varieties of every species of bedding, basket and ornamental plants. The florist's market was any point that he could reach. The beast which showed the greatest amount of endurance was hitched to the market wagon and the assistant, or son, daughter, or even the wife, was assigned to the task of visiting the neighboring towns with a load of plants in bloom.

This method ended with the spring months, and the left-over stock was either advertised at bargain prices in the local papers or thrown away as surplus.

The growers who were adjacent to cities were represented in the markets, occupying one or more stalls with the most attractive stock. At the close of the season the general routine of work followed; that of planting out and caring for the stock plants and blooming stuff for the following winter months. The equipment of these establishments was varied, as a greater variety of plants could be found in the collections of the florist of those days than now.

The organization was modest, yet complete, as the florist and his family constituted the faculty, with extra help, if needed. The duty of each was to understand the general routine of work, from the office to the stoke-hole, the system requiring every one to work for the one aim, that every available corner be filled with attractive stock and in bloom for the spring season.

A Tribute to Woman.

The florist of the early, and even the present day, has always found the wife an important factor in the organization. Her judgment and untiring interest is indispensable. She has been the helpmeet, and always will be, as long as her interest in horticulture continues. Woman's influence contributes almost altogether to the remarkable demand of the present day. Due credit is not given her for what she has accomplished. She is today prominent back of the counter in florist shops and deeply interested in the work of the greenhouse establishment.

Woman was the first to give us a treatise on horticulture in this country. This honor fell upon Mrs. Logan, a florist of Charleston, S. C. This she did at the age of seventy years, in the year 1772.

An address by J. Otto Thilow, before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, May 7, 1907.

The Modern Establishment.

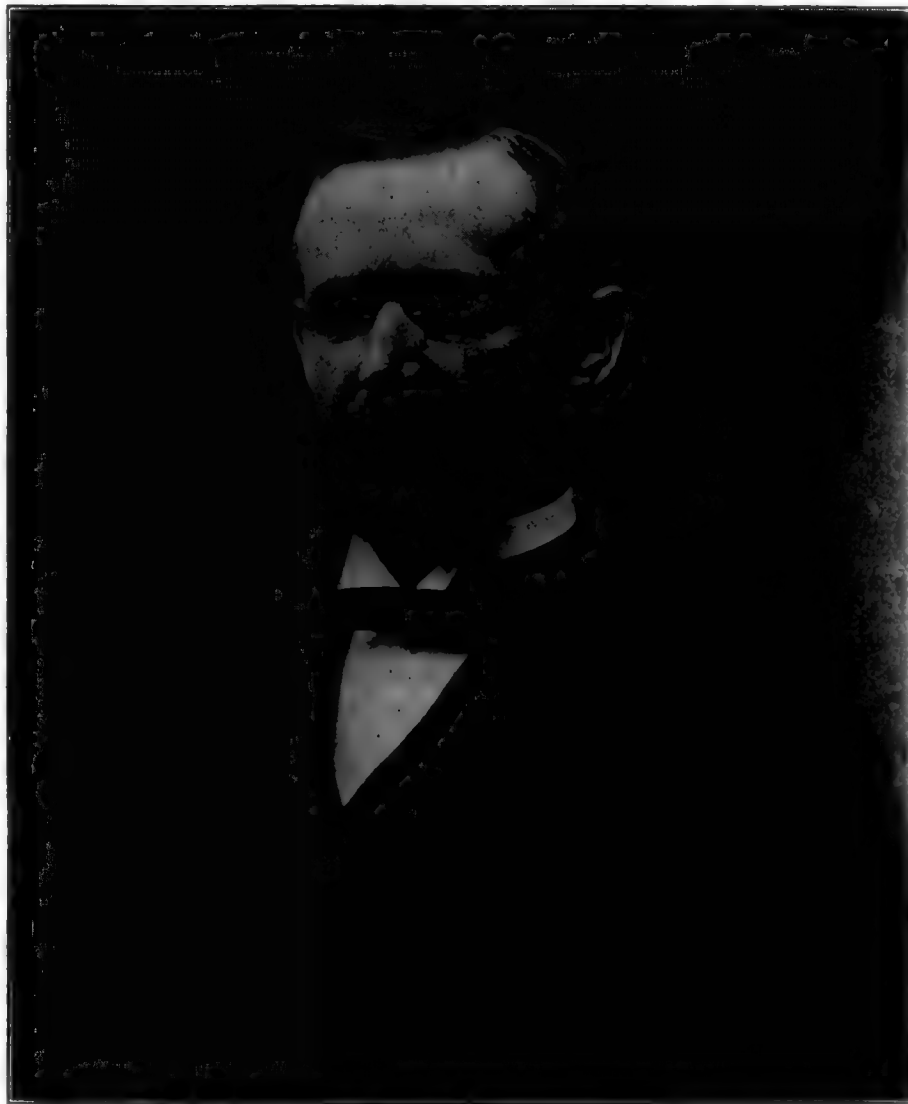

In referring to the horticultural establishments of the early days I would not pretend to say that they were not active and lucrative for the growers. Many of the veteran florists were known to you, some of them living today, who enjoyed their years of toil, with good prices for their product.

There are establishments existing today with modern methods, which pursued the routine above mentioned, but, keeping pace with the changes demanded by the advance in commercial horticulture, of the business in general, in that the growers depend on each other for special stocks. Hence the florist of the present time is retail in general stock, and wholesale in special stock.

Their dealings have become reciprocal, the trade papers have entered upon the field, and all seem to be doing a thriving business, and through this medium the enterprising florists know more of each other and the skill of those in special lines.

From my own limited observations, I can say but little of other large and aggressive horticultural establishments except the one with which I have been connected for the past quarter century, having observed the advancement and growth of this establishment, which is keeping pace with the increasing demand, largely through its own catalogue and the influence of horticultural magazines and rural home publications, which are creating an intense taste among the plant and flower-loving people of our country. And what is true of the department offering the subject for this they have branched out as specialists and are classed and known as such in the trade.

It has been noticeable that certain stocks were best suited to certain localities, and on these the growers concentrated their efforts to the greatest improvement of such stock. This method has met with general success, inducing constant extension and enlargement of facilities, demanding modern construction, heating, ventilating, simple and economical methods of handling and shipping.

This condition seems to have asserted itself within the last twenty years, and has advanced the interest and the growth paper, is true of other aggressive establishments of this country; that organization must be commensurate with modern equipment, so with your suffrage I beg to point with pardonable pride to the plant department of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., at Riverton, N. J., under the able management of Mr. J. D. Eisele, the vice-president of the company. I therefore make bold the assertion that with the advance and increase in each branch of this department may we not modestly assume it to be among the modern establishments in equipment and organization?

Diversity and Development.

The trend in recent years has been very decided in the attention given to perennials. Many works have been published, treating entirely on the old-fashioned or hardy garden. The amateurs seem to enter into this line with new zeal year after year, so that this department has grown to the enormous extent of 2,000 varieties, requiring forty acres to perpetuate the stock.

The interest in aquatics is a development of the last twelve years, and has extended from this country to Europe. Fully six acres are now devoted to this branch. Many of the best introductions of recent years are of American origin.

Twenty years ago it was considered a bold plunge to devote one house 12x100 to ferns. Since 1898 over one acre is given to these, and fully a quarter million are in readiness for immediate market, and one and a half millions are handled every season.

The palm is the leading decorative plant. With all, from the owner of the conservatory to the occupant of a flat embellished by a fire escape, the palm has a place, and is essential in the collection of plants for home adornment. These alone occupy four acres of glass. Seeds of the important varieties are imported from their native haunts, the most prominent being the kentia. These are sown in batches of from seventy-five to 100 bushels at one time. Other varieties are used in proportion. The palm industry, with that of the fern, is practically a development of the last twenty years.

The dahlia was somewhat obsolete for a number of years, but has been resurrected, and many new varieties and new types have been introduced. Ten years ago less than 6,000 constituted the stock; 75,000 in 1904, and now the enormous number of 300,000 is necessary to meet the demand, requiring fifty acres for maintaining the stock.

The demand for the ever-popular azalea is still on the increase, ranging from 150 plants imported in 1876 to the present requirement of 60,000.

Roses for outdoor planting are among the most important of spring stock, and have made the most marked increase; from 6,000 eight years ago to 200,000, the present requirement.

Enumerating the above is only to show the advancement made in commercial horticulture along the line of specialties. Much other of the varied stock is grown in proportion to the demand.

The Equipment.

To harbor and maintain an equipment of such magnitude, extensive glass and open area is necessary, besides many accessories with which to carry it through from season to season, namely, a glass area of from seven to eight acres of modern construction in greater part. Boiler capacity of 850 horse-power, consuming 3,000 tons of coal per annum. Water capacity for all uses; 300,000 gallons per day. A fumigating house of special construction as required by the state laws, for hydrocyanic acid gas, for safeguarding against even an incipient presence of scale. A complete machine shop, operated by steam power, for repairing and constructing, and supplied with saw-table for cutting lumber to required sizes for cases and crates for shipments; also a carpenter shop in constant operation. A cold storage area for storing stock for winter and early spring shipment to southern points. Experimental grounds for the thorough testing

FAMILIAR BOOSTERS IN CARICATURE.

THE Des Moines Daily Tribune is publishing a series of cartoons entitled "Boosters in Caricature," of which the above is one. It is printed together with a sketch of the subject. Chas. N. Page removed to Des Moines April 9, 1877, when he was but 16 years of age, and has been identified for thirty years with the business of which he now is the head. Mr. Page not only is a booster for Des Moines, but a booster for the horticultural trades as well. His firm is interested in all departments of the business.

of new varieties of plants of foreign and home production. A supply department which is under control of one who knows the value of preventing waste. All supplies, from office stationery, tools for machine shop, and every utensil needed under glass and on open ground, to the most minute item, is guarded with vigilant exactness, replenished before exhausted, and distributed only as needed and upon orders, the working force of this establishment being 150 men, among whom are twenty order clerks and thirty-five packers. A horticultural establishment thus equipped requires systematic organization to cope with the ever increasing demand of the eager, plant-loving public, and as the pressure and bulk of the business is confined to the short period of spring operations, the strain is severe upon those on whom the responsibility falls. The force must be divided and assigned to the various branches, the head of each force to assume the responsibility for the accomplishment of the work to which he is delegated.

The Executive Staff.

The staff must be headed by a manager, vigilant and capable, assisted by an office force of skilled horticulturists, who take up the details and carry them to completion, answering all inquiries of the departments to which they belong. He must be able to answer inquiries on all subjects in horticulture, and give information leading to same; advise the inexperienced regarding plants. He must be a fund of information, on whom the enthusiastic amateur can and does draw freely. He must be in constant touch with his trustworthy and capable heads of each department, who with him formulate plans for the seasons ahead, anticipating the demands which catalogue and other advertising mediums might inspire.

The propagator, a dependable personage, must be capable, with good judgment in regulating the stock quantities by general conditions and species. Only by close application and years of practice and study does he become familiar with the wide range of plant conditions and the care of plants, observing through all his work that careful labeling is imperative. He is to propagate in such quantities as the manager may direct.

Packing and Shipping.

The packing department is an important one. While the order clerks may do their work carefully and, to all appearances, completely, yet the packer must again check up before he finally packs for shipping. He must use judgment as to the duration of transit and pack accordingly, to guard against weather conditions at destination and in transit; and pack consistently light to save heavy transportation charges. After he is through he passes the case or cases over to the shipping department, after making a record, marking date and time of his release of said packages.

The shipping department must be under the supervision of one who knows how, when and where to ship; first, by the most expeditious and cheapest route; second, at a time when safe against severe weather; third, to a point most accessible to the consignee. He is to be provided with the latest shipping guides, and be in close touch with carrying companies, so as to keep himself informed of the most expeditious routes. Thus it requires one of keen scrutiny regarding shipping rules and conditions, so that the perishable stock he delivers is promptly and safely transported to destination, marked carefully and with certificate of inspection of state entomologist attached.

The modern horticultural establishment should have a corps of travelers, who have a knowledge of the stock, besides their catalogue information. They must anticipate the wants of their patrons, knowing the special line of each. They should be practical plantmen, and in all their transactions advance the integrity of their house.

The Catalogue.

The catalogue of the modern horticultural establishment is now an indispensable medium, finding its way into the remote corners of the globe. It is the feature on which the mail trade depends, as well as that of the customers who are within reach. This medium must be new every year, and full of information, in order to appeal to the prospective buyer. Since the half-tone process from photography gives such real reproductions, the plant catalogue, like the magazine, becomes a household pleasure and must be in the hands of the patrons early enough to be consulted before the close of winter, when open-air work is being eagerly anticipated.

The work of compiling this volume must be in the hands of one who has practical experience in all departments, as information given through a reliable catalogue is taken as authentic. It has become as much of an educator as the horticultural magazines, and must therefore be resplendent with new matter and illustrations. As photography enters largely in its compilation, a fully equipped department must be provided to observe every opportunity through the seasons for the reproduction of new features.

The one having all catalogue matter in charge should also provide the advertising matter, fresh and varied, for the trade papers and other mediums.

In Other Lines.

I have touched only superficially on the subject of equipment and organization, and have only cited that of the plant producing industry. A large, if not the greater part of those engaged in commercial horticulture, are interested in cut flower growing.

Near the busy marts of this country and of Europe are to be found extensive glass structures which find ready market for their immense product. These, too, are almost entirely given up to specialties, such as are best suited to soil, climate and conditions of their locality, and to these all forces are concentrated. I have visited some of these establishments in the east, and note from the excellent system adopted, and the success achieved, that it is entirely through proper organization and up-to-date equipment. The structures are modern in every detail. The force is divided into sections, and to each of these is allotted the care of a block. The cutting, packing and shipping is in the care of experts who, through long experience, have learned to confine their efforts to types and varieties susceptible to the greatest improvement under intense cultivation. It is true, also, that the quality of the produce from improved varieties has greatly increased the demand and engendered a wider taste.

Proper organization is essential to the economical and successful operation of a modern horticultural establishment, more especially that it does not and should not increase the detail of labor of the management, but be divided among the various heads of departments, in whom confidence should be reposed.

EARLY PLANTING.

The Advantages.

Many of the best growers in the east bench their stock this month, and it is from this early planted stock that most of the finest exhibition flowers are cut. I long since proved to my own satisfaction that the longer season of growth produced a heavier flower, and the man who plants late in June or early in July need not expect, other conditions being equal, to win many prizes.

Early planted stock has more time to ripen the wood, and this ripening is one of the essentials in producing large flowers. True, there is an extreme in ripening, also, and we do not attempt to ripen our wood so much as does the British cultivator, who, with his outdoor culture, finishes his plants with bark on the stem like a young tree. We, owing to the almost universal system of exhibiting flowers on long stems, must have those stems so they will absorb water to sustain the flower, and this a stem cannot do if hardened too much. There is a big difference between ripening the wood in the fall and getting the young plants hide-bound at the present time. See that they are well supplied with water, particularly on those days when we get bright sunshine and a brisk and drying wind. Just now, for a week or two when everyone is busy, plants are apt to be neglected and when a plant gets dried out a few times it becomes hard and wiry in the stem. It is not an easy matter to get such a plant back into a healthy, vigorous condition after planting.

Some varieties make a spindly growth naturally in early spring, Appleton being one of them, but they are merely the exception that proves the rule. Start with the good, fat cutting if possible, and keep it fat during its early growth; or, in other words, keep your young stock in a soft, growing condition. I am an advocate of placing the young stock out in a coldframe for a few weeks before planting, so that the plants will not get drawn up or spindly, as they so easily do when grown close together in a house, often with other and more tender subjects. Holding the plants in good shape till planting time is very important, and if the house is ready and the soil in shape, do not delay the planting longer than you can help.

Soil and Head-room.

We will assume, of course, that the soil was stacked and composted last fall and chops down in fine, mellow condition. Such a soil, with the addition of a 6-inch pot of fine bone to a barrowful of soil, will grow mums in fine shape. Get it in dry and fill the bench level full, so that a little firming after planting leaves the soil about half an inch below the top of the outside board, giving plenty of room for water.

The distance apart to plant should be not less than 9x9 inches for this early planting. The plants will make long stems and the bed will be completely shaded from the sun. If it is not a question of money, but only just how fine you can grow the stock, as it is in some private establishments, I would say plant 9x12 inches. With early planting, of course, one must figure on the head room, and unless you have six feet clear above the bench it is better to top the plants over and wait awhile. The dwarf kinds, such as Cheltoni, Beatrice May, May Seddon, Nellie Pockett and Merza, will not get over four feet planted now, but many of the general run of varieties will, and it will not pay to plant early and then have to bend the stems all ways to get the flowers away from the glass in the fall. Foresight is better than hindsight in figuring out such problems as these. If you cannot plant early in the bench you can always have some in pots, and these can be set along the paths or anywhere at flowering time.

Some splendid growers of my acquaintance grow their finest flowers exclusively in pots and boxes. My only objection to it is that it takes considerable time. A man can look after many more plants on a bench than he could if those same plants were in pots.

Specimen Plants.

As these plants are ready, move them from 6-inch to 8-inch pots, never permitting them to become pot-bound in the least degree. Let the soil be good rotted sod, chopped not too fine, with all the fiber retained, and a fourth part of well-rotted manure, with some bone added. If you are so unfortunate as not to have any fibrous sod, use coarse sand in the soil, so it will not pack into a solid mass. The mechanical condition of the soil must be right, because it is a long while to next November and it is an easy matter to get a plant waterlogged and unthrifty.

Attend faithfully to the pinching of the main shoots, and as the plant begins to round out, put a stake here and there to tie the main branches, so that they will not get broken by the wind.

unnecessary, thanks to Campbell's invention. The sulphur vaporizer throws a thin film of sulphur evenly over everything within range, and, provided the directions are strictly adhered to, it is done practically without risk. I have used the apparatus several years without mishap and look upon it as a desideratum attained. It is, in fact, what for years we longed for, and I notice from your advertisement columns that though it is a British invention, it is obtained at several addresses in the United States. It renders us quite independent of hot pipes for diffusion.

LATE PLANTING.

I have under construction one greenhouse 21x75 feet in which roses will be grown. It will be six weeks or two months before all my material for roof construction will be here and, of course, after it arrives several days more before house will be completed. Since that would make it about July 15 to August 1, it would be late to plant roses. Is it considered practical to set plants in benches before the roof is completed? What roses would be best suited to grow in the same house?

J. N. H.

Roses being so sensitive to overwatering and climatic conditions, it is not a safe practice to plant the benches before having the houses glazed. It is much better to keep going along by repotting and, even though the planting may be late, you will get better results and eliminate many of the risks.

A beginner should plant those varieties which possess vigor and immunity from fungous diseases, among which are Golden Gate, Ivory, Chatenay and Richmond. These varieties are also good all-round producers and do not require the same amount of scientific care as do Bride and Maid. It may be well to try these in small quantities in order to gain experience.

RIBES.

ROSES

YOUNG STOCK.

It is rare to find a house in which there are no defects in the glass, and these defects are certain to cause blistering and burning of the tender leaves if not attended to. These defects should be located as early in the season as possible, as burns caused by them have a very debilitating effect. Select a very bright day, when the burning spots can be easily detected, and touch them with either a solution of alum or boiled oil.

It does not require a big splotch of paint, which is unsightly, to eliminate the spots, which are usually minute and consequently hard to locate. This searching for the burning spots cannot be done in an hour, as the sun shadows are continually shifting, but should be persevered in as long as the sun continues to shine on the glass or until the burning spots have all been subdued.

Beauty foliage, even on the old plants, is liable to suffer, and as the most valuable leaves at this season are usually above or overhead, it is difficult without a close examination to detect the damage. A close inspection should be made daily.

Preparations for planting should now be made by getting the soil into proper condition and having all tools, etc., in good working order. The work of that busy season will be greatly expedited by having all supplies, such as nails, lumber and all other necessities, in stock and in their proper places, so that no time may be lost in getting the benches repaired, filled and planted.

An old friend, a prominent grower, has just called my attention to the fact that for the last two seasons I have neglected to say anything on the subject of fumigation as connected with rose culture under glass. This subject has been discussed by so many able growers that I felt as if I had nothing new or interesting to set before my readers; hence the omission.

In a future issue I intend to give, to the best of my ability, my ideas and experience along these lines.

I am always thankful to any of our readers who call my attention to any omissions or to any subjects which they wish discussed.

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Field Planting.

By the time this appears in print, planting in the field will be in full swing, and the quicker it is ended the better for the plants. Up to this date, May 6, we have been having light frosts almost regularly, which have caused more or less hesitancy in making a beginning. They have not been heavy enough to do any real damage to plants that are not too soft, but while frosts occur quite regularly one can not tell when the temperature may take an extra dip and cause irreparable damage to any tender plants that may be out.

In my locality there has been rather less than the average amount of rain this spring and the soil is turning up in fine condition, especially where it was plowed last fall. Wherever this condition prevails an early completion of field planting is especially advisable, while the sun is comparatively weak and the plants can get hold of the soil before it dries out too much, even if it does not rain for some little time. If your carnation field is in close proximity to the water supply you need not consider this proposition so much, but if it lies some distance away and artificial watering is impractical, then it pays to take advantage of every little point.

Watering in the Field.

I am not an advocate of artificial watering for the carnation field after the plants are in active growth; in fact, I prefer to grow them rather on the dry side, but when they are first planted out it would be folly to allow them to suffer for want of water. One good rain a few days after setting out will usually suffice to give them a start, if the cultivating is looked after properly. Then, by the time the soil dries out to amount to anything, the roots are driving down toward the moister soil below. At this time of the year rains are usually frequent enough to eliminate any danger of the plants burning out, but later in the month such a thing might happen and then is when it is desirable to have the artificial supply handy. Do not drag several hundred feet of hose all over the patch, if you water that way, but run a 1-inch pipe across the field and place hose bibs along so that you can reach every plant with a length of fifty feet of hose. This is quickly done and will save you much time and many plants. By leaving out about every twentieth row you will have a path to work in without trampling any of the plants. The inch pipe will not reduce the pressure of the water as much as the hose would, either.

Where watering is to be kept up all through the summer, it pays to put in a system especially adapted for that purpose, but it would be a waste of time and money to put it in your carnation field. The few times you would really need to water would not pay for the trouble, etc. However, if you plant any carnations for summer blooming, by all means plant them within reach of the water. There is a vast difference between growing a carnation in the field for benching and for blooming in the field. In the latter case you want to push them along as rapidly as possible and plenty of water will help wonderfully.

Condition of Soil.

There is one warning I wish to give you, and that is to stay off the field while the soil is too wet.

If the soil turns up wet, and will not crumble, you would better leave it a few days longer, until it will crumble readily. If it is turned up wet and the warm sun beats on it, and perhaps a drying wind springs up, the soil will become lumpy and no amount of cultivating will ever put it into first-class condition during the whole season. Good plants will of course be out of the question. Flowing in the fall has a very beneficial effect in this respect, by keeping the soil loose and mellow, so it can dry out quickly in the spring. Soils differ in texture and require different lengths of time to dry out properly, and the heavier the soil is the more beneficial is the fall plowing.

You will also find it wise to begin the cultivating the first day of the planting. In the evening, before quitting time, have a man go over the day's planting with the cultivator, to loosen the soil between the rows. The fresh soil is packed down quickly from tramping across the field in planting, etc., and the cultivating the same day will do more good than three cultivatings after the sun has beaten down on it a week.

Growing Indoors.

If you expect to grow your Mrs. Lawson, or others, inside all summer, be sure they do not become potbound and stunted. If they have not already been shifted into the pots from which you expect to bench them, then seize upon the first opportunity to shift them. They must be kept growing, else failure will be sure to result. There are many ways of handling them successfully. Some growers pot into 4-inch pots and plunge outside as early as possible; others keep them inside all the time; both plant on the bench in June. One of the finest houses of Lawson I ever saw was planted from small pots in February. Almost any method is good if you will keep the one aim in sight, and that is, to keep them on the move, but not to get them too soft.

A. F. J. BAUR.

THE AMPELOPSIS.

The ampelopsis is a quite large and most useful genus of hardy climbers. One species enters largely into the plantsman's trade. We all handle, and some of us largely, that unrivalled climber, A. tricuspidata, so universally known as A. Veitchii. It has many aliases among our patrons, being called Japanese ivy, Boston ivy, etc. For the covering of unsightly walls, stone or brick barns, and on the most costly mansions if the owner chooses, it has no equal, needing no support of any kind.

Though making but a moderate growth the first two years it is, when well established, a most vigorous grower and it climbs to the roofs of buildings. William Scott says there is a fallacy about its growing only on the south and east aspects; that in one city he has heard it stated that it did best on the north side. It will grow on every side of a house, north or south, but should be given a bushel of good soil for a start, and in exposed places some litter over the roots the first year. Millions have been planted in the residence portions of cities, and millions more are yet to be planted as cities spread out. It is not a suitable climber for a frame house, for the house must be painted and that settles the vine unless you are content to cut it down and begin again from the ground.

Propagation is by cuttings or seed.

The cuttings can be put into flats and should be made in September with two or three eyes of the current year's growth. A light loam is a good compost for the cuttings and a shaded bench in the greenhouse is the place. Or, the cuttings can be put at once into the ground in a coldframe. They should be wintered, whether propagated inside or out, in a coldframe and planted out the following spring. Those who have raised them from seed for a number of years think it the cheapest method. Sow the seed in March thickly in flats, covering a quarter inch. In May or June pot them off into 2-inch pots and when there are benches to spare shift into 4-inch and grow them on all summer inside, giving them an 18-inch stake. In September set them outside and let them get the fall frosts slowly. This is mentioned because they have been kept indoors till October, and then, when put out, get a severe frost that would kill them to the ground. A deep frame with the pots plunged is the best place to winter them, removing the glass covering in April so that they are in no way forced.

These plants a year old will be most satisfactory to sell to your customers, and being from pots there is no risk of losing one. Some readers may say you can buy plants cheaper than you can raise them. By the above method you will find Ampelopsis Veitchii a more profitable plant than many others you grow. It seems to thrive in any soil when once established. When growing it young we use a heavy loam.

GREENVILLE, S. C.—J. Newton Holland has ordered the material for a new greenhouse, 21x75, for roses.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Kring Bros. have had an excellent season, their carnations having bloomed heavily all winter. They ship from 10,000 to 20,000 a week.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Coelogyne Cristata.

The present is a suitable time to over-haul Coelogyne cristata, that most useful and easily cultivated winter-blooming orchid. Flowering, as it does, during February and March, when cattleyas are not so abundant, it is of special value to florists. The genus coelogyne is a fairly large one, but the variety cristata is the only one of much commercial value. *Coelogyne*s succeed well in either pots, pans or baskets, perhaps the latter receptacles being preferable. They need good drainage and a mixture of fern fiber, sphagnum moss and lumpy charcoal for compost. Plants which have become thoroughly matted with roots and in which the bulbs are densely crowded will not bloom satisfactorily, but should be pulled to pieces, keeping as many roots intact as possible, and placed more thinly in new baskets or pans. They will not bloom very freely the following winter, but the next season will make a fine show.

In summer they will grow well in a frame or house where they can be shaded from the full rays of the sun. They do not need heavy shade and after the bulbs are half developed increase the amount of sunlight and they will flower all the better for it. Keep lightly syringed after potting, but do not water until growth is well advanced. Established plants will need an abundant water supply from now on and liquid manure once a week after June 1 will be found helpful. A temperature at night of 50 to 55 degrees suits these plants in winter. They do not succeed well in a warmer house.

There are several forms of C. cristata. The Chatsworth variety has extra large flowers. Alba is a pure white form, flowering later than the ordinary C. cristata. There is also a pretty, pale-lemon lipped variety named Lemoniana.

Scented Geraniums.

Almost every florist grows a batch of scented-leaved geraniums, of which there are several varieties. These and lemon-scented verbenas are popular with almost every person and the grower who has a good batch never finds much trouble in disposing of them. There is quite a good demand in the large markets for the cut stems, which, arranged in bowls of water, yield a pleasant perfume in a room. For cutting from July to October, a plentiful supply may be had outdoors by allowing the plants two feet apart in the rows and running the rows three feet apart. They need this space, for in good compost they will make vigorous growths. If a good winter supply is desired, keep a percentage of the plants in pots, shift into larger sizes before they become potbound, pinch occasionally, keep in the open air all summer, and you will have some grand plants in the fall.

From cuttings taken now, good plants in 6-inch pots may be had by the end of September. The old roots from which you will cut during the coming summer, if lifted before killing frosts come, potted up or placed in flats six inches deep, several together, will also give useful shoots for bunching, and plenty of cuttings for winter propagation, if needed.

Primulas.

Seedlings of Primula obconica, P. Sinensis and the new yellow, P. Kewensis, should be pricked off by this time into flats, using a light, leaf-moldy compost. Do not leave them too long before potting, or a loss of foliage will inevitably be the result. A house with a carnation temperature will be about right for them, and some shade will be necessary. Far too often these plants are being ruined by being too long in ruinously high temperatures. It should be remembered that they are all plants needing cool culture, with an abundance of ventilation on all favorable occasions. In summer they do best in frames, from which the sashes can be drawn off on cool, cloudy days and at night, unless thunder storms are likely. Grown in this way, the plants are vigorous, stocky and far superior to any kept in the houses during the hot months.

Marguerites

Marguerites are still blooming profusely, but Memorial day trade usually cleans them up. Have you a good batch already propagated for next winter and spring supply? If not, you probably cannot get any suitable cuttings now, as the plants carry nothing but flowering wood. Prune back some of those done blooming, moderately hard. Keep them well watered and as soon as some soft cuttings appear put them in the propagating bench. The plants do not break freely in the hot months, but make rampant growth after the end of August.

If a supply of flowering plants is needed at Christmas, when they are especially useful, save a number of your smallest flowering plants, prune back to make them shapely, pinch when needed, plunge outdoors when danger of frost is gone, let them root through the bottoms of the pots and give them a small shift when lifted, place in a cool, light, airy house and you will have nice Christmas stock.

The cuttings you have put in this spring will make excellent plants to succeed the older ones and will give a succession from early March until Memorial day. Do not allow any flowers to be produced through the summer. Never let them get into a dust dry state. Ply the hose among them daily to keep down thrips, and you will have plants which will be a credit to you.

Amaryllis.

Those showy bulbous plants, the amaryllises, are not so much grown commercially as we would wish. The fact that the large flowers bruise easily makes it necessary to ship them in the bud. These open well in a store window, or when cut come out in water in a warm room. The hybrid varieties will now be practically done flowering, unless the bulbs have been retarded in cold storage. A great mistake, but a common one, is to dry off the plants immediately the flowers are gone. Nothing could be more harmful. Not alone on amaryllis is this practice common, but with gloxinias, achimenes, tuberous begonias, freesias and many other bulbous or tuberous-rooted plants.

A liberal supply of water should be given amaryllis after flowering, accompanied by liquid manure stimulants until leaf growth is completed, after which it may slowly be reduced until they are quite dry. Plants raised from seed, the best method of propagation, should be kept growing continuously until they ally suffice to give them a start, if the cultivating is looked after properly. Then, by the time the soil dries out to amount to anything, the roots are driving down toward the moister soil below. At this time of the year rains are usually frequent enough to eliminate any danger of the plants burning out, but later in the month such a thing might happen and then is when it is desirable to have the artificial supply handy. Do not drag several hundred feet of hose all over the patch, if you water that way, but run a 1-inch pipe across the field and place hose bibs along so that you can reach every plant with a length of fifty feet of hose. This is quickly done and will save you much time and many plants. By leaving out about every twentieth row you will have a path to work in without trampling any of the plants. The inch pipe will not reduce the pressure of the water as much as the hose would, either.

Where watering is to be kept up all through the summer, it pays to put in a system especially adapted for that purpose, but it would be a waste of time and money to put it in your carnation field. The few times you would really need to water would not pay for the trouble, etc. However, if you plant any carnations for summer blooming, by all means plant them within reach of the water. There is a vast difference between growing a carnation in the field for benching and for blooming in the field. In the latter case you want to push them along as rapidly as possible and plenty of water will help wonderfully.

Condition of Soil.

There is one warning I wish to give you, and that is to stay off the field while the soil is too wet.

If the soil turns up wet, and will not crumble, you would better leave it a few days longer, until it will crumble readily. If it is turned up wet and the warm sun beats on it, and perhaps a drying wind springs up, the soil will become lumpy and no amount of cultivating will ever put it into first-class condition during the whole season. Good plants will of course be out of the question. Flowing in the fall has a very beneficial effect in this respect, by keeping the soil loose and mellow, so it can dry out quickly in the spring. Soils differ in texture and require different lengths of time to dry out properly, and the heavier the soil is the more beneficial is the fall plowing.

You will also find it wise to begin the cultivating the first day of the planting. In the evening, before quitting time, have a man go over the day's planting with the cultivator, to loosen the soil between the rows. The fresh soil is packed down quickly from tramping across the field in planting, etc., and the cultivating the same day will do more good than three cultivatings after the sun has beaten down on it a week.

Growing Indoors.

If you expect to grow your Mrs. Lawson, or others, inside all summer, be sure they do not become potbound and stunted. If they have not already been shifted into the pots from which you expect to bench them, then seize upon the first opportunity to shift them. They must be kept growing, else failure will be sure to result. There are many ways of handling them successfully. Some growers pot into 4-inch pots and plunge outside as early as possible; others keep them inside all the time; both plant on the bench in June. One of the finest houses of Lawson I ever saw was planted from small pots in February. Almost any method is good if you will keep the one aim in sight, and that is, to keep them on the move, but not to get them too soft.

THE AMPELOPSIS.

The ampelopsis is a quite large and most useful genus of hardy climbers. One species enters largely into the plantsman's trade. We all handle, and some of us largely, that unrivalled climber, A. triancipitata, so universally known as A. Veitchii. It has many aliases among our patrons, being called Japanese ivy, Boston ivy, etc. For the covering of unsightly walls, stone or brick barns, and on the most costly mansions if the owner chooses, it has no equal, needing no support of any kind.

Though making but a moderate growth the first two years it is, when well established, a most vigorous grower and it climbs to the roofs of buildings. William Scott says there is a fallacy about its growing only on the south and east aspects; that in one city he has heard it stated that it did best on the north side. It will grow on every side of a house, north or south, but should be given a bushel of good soil for a start, and in exposed places some litter over the roots the first year. Millions have been planted in the residence portions of cities, and millions more are yet to be planted as cities spread out. It is not a suitable climber for a frame house, for the house must be painted and that settles the vine unless you are content to cut it down and begin again from the ground.

Propagation is by cuttings or seed.

The cuttings can be put into flats and should be made in September with two or three eyes of the current year's growth. A light loam is a good compost for the cuttings and a shaded bench in the greenhouse is the place. Or, the cuttings can be put at once into the ground in a coldframe. They should be wintered, whether propagated inside or out, in a coldframe and planted out the following spring. Those who have raised them from seed for a number of years think it the cheapest method. Sow the seed in March thickly in flats, covering a quarter inch. In May or June pot them off into 2-inch pots and when there are benches to spare shift into 4-inch and grow them on all summer inside, giving them an 18-inch stake. In September set them outside and let them get the fall frosts slowly. This is mentioned because they have been kept indoors till October, and then, when put out, get a severe frost that would kill them to the ground. A deep frame with the pots plunged is the best place to winter them, removing the glass covering in April so that they are in no way forced.

These plants a year old will be most satisfactory to sell to your customers, and being from pots there is no risk of losing one. Some readers may say you can buy plants cheaper than you can raise them. By the above method you will find Ampelopsis Veitchii a more profitable plant than many others you grow. It seems to thrive in any soil when once established. When growing it young we use a heavy loam.

GREENVILLE, S. C.—J. Newton Holland has ordered the material for a new greenhouse, 21x75, for roses.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Kring Bros. have had an excellent season, their carnations having bloomed heavily all winter. They ship from 10,000 to 20,000 a week.

SEASONABLE

SUGGESTIONS

Coelogyne Cristata.

The present is a suitable time to over-plant Coelogyne cristata, that most useful and easily cultivated winter-blooming orchid. Flowering, as it does, during February and March, when cattleyas are not so abundant, it is of special value to florists. The genus coelogyne is a fairly large one, but the variety cristata is the only one of much commercial value. *Coelogyne*s succeed well in either pots, pans or baskets, perhaps the latter receptacles being preferable. They need good drainage and a mixture of fern fiber, sphagnum moss and lumpy charcoal for compost. Plants which have become thoroughly matted with roots and in which the bulbs are densely crowded will not bloom satisfactorily, but should be pulled to pieces, keeping as many roots intact as possible, and placed more thinly in new baskets or pans. They will not bloom very freely the following winter, but the next season will make a fine show.

In summer they will grow well in a frame or house where they can be shaded from the full rays of the sun. They do not need heavy shade and after the bulbs are half developed increase the amount of sunlight and they will flower all the better for it. Keep lightly syringed after potting, but do not water until growth is well advanced. Established plants will need an abundant water supply from now on and liquid manure once a week after June 1 will be found helpful. A temperature at night of 50 to 55 degrees suits these plants in winter. They do not succeed well in a warmer house.

There are several forms of C. cristata. The Chatsworth variety has extra large flowers. Alba is a pure white form, flowering later than the ordinary C. cristata. There is also a pretty, pale-lemon tipped variety named Lemoniana.

Scented Geraniums.

Almost every florist grows a batch of scented-leaved geraniums, of which there are several varieties. These and lemon-scented verbenas are popular with almost every person and the grower who has a good batch never finds much trouble in disposing of them. There is quite a good demand in the large markets for the cut stems, which, arranged in bowls of water, yield a pleasant perfume in a room. For cutting from July to October, a plentiful supply may be had outdoors by allowing the plants two feet apart in the rows and running the rows three feet apart. They need this space, or in good compost they will make vigorous growths. If a good winter supply is desired, keep a percentage of the plants in pots, shift into larger sizes before they become potbound, pinch occasionally, keep in the open air all summer, and you will have some grand plants in the fall.

From cuttings taken now, good plants in 6-inch pots may be had by the end of September. The old roots from which you will cut during the coming summer, if lifted before killing frosts come, potted up or placed in flats six inches deep, several together, will also give useful shoots for bunching, and plenty of cuttings for winter propagation, if needed.

Primulas.

Seedlings of Primula obconica, P. Stenensis and the new yellow, P. Kewensis, should be pricked off by this time into flats, using a light, leaf-moldy compost. Do not leave them too long before potting, or a loss of foliage will inevitably be the result. A house with a carnation temperature will be about right for them, and some shade will be necessary. Far too often these plants are being ruined by being too long in ruinously high temperatures. It should be remembered that they are all plants needing cool culture, with an abundance of ventilation on all favorable occasions. In summer they do best in frames, from which the sashes can be drawn off on cool, cloudy days and at night, unless thunder storms are likely. Grown in this way, the plants are vigorous, stocky and far superior to any kept in the houses during the hot months.

Marguerites

Marguerites are still blooming profusely, but Memorial day trade usually cleans them up. Have you a good batch already propagated for next winter and spring supply? If not, you probably cannot get any suitable cuttings now, as the plants carry nothing but flowering wood. Prune back some of those done blooming, moderately hard. Keep them well watered and as soon as some soft cuttings appear put them in the propagating bench. The plants do not break freely in the hot months, but make rampant growth after the end of August.

If a supply of flowering plants is needed at Christmas, when they are especially useful, save a number of your smallest flowering plants, prune back to make them shapely, pinch when needed, plunge outdoors when danger of frost is gone, let them root through the bottoms of the pots and give them a small shift when lifted, place in a cool, light, airy house and you will have nice Christmas stock.

The cuttings you have put in this spring will make excellent plants to succeed the older ones, and will give a succession from early March until Memorial day. Do not allow any flowers to be produced through the summer. Never let them get into a dust dry state. Ply the hose among them daily to keep down thrips, and you will have plants which will be a credit to you.

Amaryllis.

Those showy bulbous plants, the amaryllises, are not so much grown commercially as we would wish. The fact that the large flowers bruise easily makes it necessary to ship them in the bud. These open well in a store window, or when cut come out in water in a warm room. The hybrid varieties will now be practically done flowering, unless the bulbs have been retarded in cold storage. A great mistake, but a common one, is to dry off the plants immediately the flowers are gone. Nothing could be more harmful. Not alone on amaryllis is this practice common, but with gloxinias, aelimenas, tuberous begonias, freesias and many other bulbous or tuberous-rooted plants.

A liberal supply of water should be given amaryllis after flowering, accompanied by liquid manure stimulants until leaf growth is completed, after which it may slowly be reduced until they are quite dry. Plants raised from seed, the best method of propagation, should be kept growing continuously until they bloom, which may be as early as fifteen months, or as long as three years, according to the treatment received.

Do not place amaryllises under the benches, but give them a light, sunny location until growth is completed, then they can be placed in a more out of the way place, if desired, and when the foliage is decaying they can be stood under a bench until the time for potting again arrives. The best time to sow seed is January or February, but home saved seed is better started as soon as gathered.

Lorraine Begonias.

Cuttings, with us, are now being produced in abundance on the old Lorraine plants, which were rested for a time. Early batches are rooted and potted off, but we can get good plants from cuttings put in for another six weeks yet. As a rule, plants from leaf cuttings are more vigorous in habit and carry larger blooms than those from shoots. The latter have a dense and more bushy habit and, while the flowers are smaller, they are much more thickly scattered over the plants.

This begonia does not make rapid growth during the hot months, but after the end of August it increases in size rapidly. Give the young plants a warm

German Iris.

There are a number of herbaceous perennials which are useful to commercial florists. One of these is the well-known and popular German iris. Its culture is simple and it increases in size quite rapidly, being best transplanted every second or third year. The best time for planting is in August or early September, but it can be moved any time before the ground freezes, as well as in early spring. Some years the flowers are in good season for Memorial day, when they are especially useful in making up large cemetery bouquets. The present spring has been so cold and backward, however, over the greater part of the country that many will not have them in flower by May 30 this year.

There are now many fine varieties of Iris Germanica, comprising pure white, clear golden yellow, pink, dark blue, pale blue and a variety of other separate and mixed colors, and even if the flowers cannot be all sold it would pay growers to have a few clumps of them on their place, for, being of such simple culture and withal so popular, many plants can in this way be disposed of to visiting flower buyers. Keep the plants named, if you have an assortment, and you ought to have no trouble in disposing of a good many each year.

for carnations, roses, chrysanthemums or other stock in benches. Add some bone meal in turning it and chop up the rougher sod.

Plant out any left-over plants of azaleas, acacias, ericas and epacris, pick away all loose soil from the balls, remove the drainage and be sure you plant firmly. Give them a sunny location, where you can readily reach them with the hose.

Keep all bedding stock freely ventilated. Don't neglect the watering. Try and get some flowers on as many geraniums, heliotropes and other pot plants as possible. Customers usually prefer the plant carrying a truss of flowers even if it is of smaller size.

It is safe now to plant out verbenas, dianthus, pentstemons, antirrhinums, stocks, asters and some other annuals, but do not risk petunias, salvias, coleus, heliotropes, alternantheras and other more tender stock until toward the end of the month, even though a hot wave may tempt you to do so.

As you sell bedding plants, don't leave the pots lying around the houses or frames. Keep them picked up and stored according to their sizes. Remember that cleanliness, which may be taken as an equivalent of neatness floriculturally, is next to godliness.

Cut-worms have made their annual appearance in the east and will soon do much damage unless speedily checked. Lay down a mixture of bran, Paris green and powdered sugar for their benefit, and try hand picking at night with a lantern if you have a bad attack of them. It is tedious, but necessary. Keep the ground constantly cultivated. This also helps to discommode them.

Memorial day will be here in two weeks. Time your crops as closely as possible for this important holiday. It looks now as if there would be but little outdoor material available this year.

Give peonies a sprinkling of nitrate of soda or some other stimulant. It will materially affect the quality of the blooms.

Look out for aphids on your hardy roses and dose with a solution of whale oil soap at once.

DAHLIAS FROM CUTTINGS.

In the REVIEW of April 25, under the heading Seasonable Suggestions, I notice some items on dahlias from green cuttings. As a practical commercial grower I can indorse a portion of the notes, and for the same reason I will have to take issue with you on others.

That a well grown plant from a cutting will give excellent results is scarcely open to question. They make plants of fine form, and flower freely, and if propagated and grown intelligently, there should be no serious question of their producing good tubers—not so large, of course, as those grown from tubers, but nevertheless good commercial stock.

I agree also on the good qualities of the pot roots. These have my hearty indorsement in my recent work, "The Dahlia Manual."

But when it comes to the question of green plants for a general commercial trade in a country as large as ours, the proposition has in it a large element of the impractical. In Europe it is quite practical and, as you say, the universal practice.

But conditions in Europe cannot be compared with conditions in America.

bench well up to the light, with only a thin coat of shading over the glass. Do not allow any flowers to be produced and pinch out the tops of any needing it. Lorraine begonias seem to succeed best under warm treatment until the flowers start to open, after which time they are best kept in a temperature that will suit carnations.

Brief Reminders.

Where have you stored your freesia bulbs? They should not be dried right after the flowers are cut, but gradually, until the foliage shows discoloration. Place in a cool, dry shed when quite dry and pick out the bulbs when opportunity offers.

Turn over your compost piles prepared

There a few hours' travel and a cheap parcels post make practical what in this country is not practical. Here a grower often ships to points where the order will be from three to six days in reaching the place where the plants are to be sold or planted. This, in the warm spring months, results often in either badly wilted or decayed foliage. Or, if moisture and temperature have been in proportion, a three to six days' growth while in a crowded condition will have seriously changed the shape and decreased the future usefulness of the plants.

For local points the green plant is all right, but for distant points the tuber or pot root is undoubtedly superior. Shipments sent to dealers as a rule are not so objectionable as those sent to the amateur and to private gardens, as the professional understands how to treat them so much better.

Years ago I used this green plant stock to some extent for supplying trade, but complaints were so common of the green plants, and compliments so general on the tubers, that I abandoned the green plants entirely, except for my own growing, and do not care to offer them again.

A word further. While I believe we all agree on the good qualities of pot roots, still I believe more care should be used by the propagator. Last year there was general complaint of blind stock and this year starts out not much better. In some of the new stock which I have procured this year, nearly one-third is blind. Propagators have evidently taken the cutting off just above the joint, instead of just below.

CLEMATIS.

The writer has read with much interest the article about clematis in the issue of the REVIEW for May 2, page 1817. We are glad to see this valuable climber receiving attention in your columns. Clematis paniculata has attained wide popularity, and deservedly so, but the large-flowering varieties are worthy of much more general planting than is at present accorded them.

We regret to see that your correspondent assumes, apparently, that the large-flowering clematis sold in this country are all imported stock. We grow and sell to the trade annually a matter of 125,000 to 150,000 ourselves, and there are several other American houses that propagate them in considerable quantities. If we may say it without the imputation of undue prejudice in favor of our own goods, we should like to recommend American grown clematis as more likely to succeed in this country than the fleshy-rooted, somewhat drop-sical plants imported from Holland. The soil is so different there, and the amount of moisture so much greater in both ground and atmosphere, that it is small wonder the plants frequently fail when transplanted to the very different conditions of this country.

Your correspondent states that one dare not guarantee clematis to live. With American grown clematis we see no reason why this can not be as safely done as with most other plants. As stated in the other article, they should have rich, deep soil. It is also of the utmost importance that the newly set plants should have firm supports upon which to climb, and should be tied to the supports as soon as they have made even a few inches of growth. If a plant is sprawled loose upon the ground, and blown back and forth by the wind, it is likely to break the stem entirely, or even if that does not happen it causes the outer bark to split and renders the plant much more susceptible to fungous diseases or other troubles. We are convinced that most of the so-called clematis blight is nothing more than the breaking or serious cracking of the stems near the ground, from the lack of being fastened to a firm support.

Your correspondent mentions that Clematis paniculata roots freely from cuttings and then states that the large-flowering varieties are usually propagated by grafting. It is true that the European growers propagate clematis by grafting, and by layering, but all the American growers, so far as we know, grow the large-flowering varieties from cuttings. It is quite a trick to do it just right, but when fully understood it is a much more rapid method of propagation and, to our mind, produces better plants. As to Clematis paniculata, it roots readily enough from cuttings, but we know of no commercial establishment which propagates them in that way. They can be grown much more easily and economically from seed.

THE PHOENIX STORE.

The Phoenix Nursery Co., at Bloomington, Ill., is doing a nice retail flower business in the store illustrated in this issue of the REVIEW. The manager is Fred H. Rowe, formerly with the Chicago Carnation Co., of Joliet, and brother of Harry Rowe, the Chicago retailer. The retail store was opened last September. It is 22x90 feet and fitted up in first-class style. The fixtures in the store are in white enamel and include a set of seed cases where a considerable stock is carried and a nice trade done in the season. The partition and ice-box separate the salesroom from the workroom in the rear. The ice-box itself is eight feet six inches wide, three feet six inches deep and eight feet ten inches high. The ice goes in the top from the rear, which is a great convenience. The Phoenix Nursery Co. has 25,000 square feet of glass devoted to cut flowers and plants. Six hundred acres are planted to nursery stock. The business was established at Bloomington in 1852 and was incorporated in 1890.

PRESERVATIVES OF WOOD.

I am adding to my present plant one house 21x75 feet in which roses will be grown. In my town no dealers carry cypress lumber in stock, which makes it expensive to have it shipped from the lower part of the state, but dealers have a liquid preservative known by trade name of Carbolinum, which they claim makes ordinary pine lumber last many times the usual length. Can you tell me if this Carbolinum is injurious to plant life or if it materially adds to the length of life of wood?

J. N. H.

We infer from his letter that the pine lumber treated with the chemical named is to be used for other parts of the greenhouse, and not for the roof construction. It is possible, however, that he is thinking of using it for the entire greenhouse and in that case we certainly would not recommend pine lumber, even when treated with creosote; nor even cypress, for that matter, if it were to be treated with chemicals. All wood preservatives that we have ever seen, or heard of, contain a certain quantity of coal tar, or the active principles of it, and all florists are well aware of the fact that tar would not be a desirable material to use as a coating for the roof of a greenhouse. In our booklet on how to erect a greenhouse, under the heading "Wood Posts and Walls," we state clearly that tar should never be used on account of its effect on plant life.

It is true that cypress contains nearly all of the active principles of creosote, but they are blended with the fibers of the wood in a way that no soaking, dipping or brushing process could do it—it has become a part of the substance through ages of growth and through evolution of the tree thousands of years ago. It is this peculiar quality in cypress that gives it such great durability—which makes it a long-lived wood, which no man can imitate with any degree of success.

Your subscriber refers to Carbolinum for treating pine to give it durability, but on making inquiry of several large chemists and wholesale druggists we can find no such article, or learn of it. Chemists tell us that every wood preservative contains some coal tar, as before stated, and this precludes any question as to whether it is desirable for greenhouse structures or not. It is safe to say that cypress would never be used for greenhouse structures if pine, or a cheaper grade of lumber, could be treated with chemicals and made to fill its place. We repeat, that the man who uses cypress and gets the right kind of cypress makes no mistake and will always be glad that he did not try something else.

PLATYCERIUMS FOR MARKET.

I am more than ever convinced, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (England), that it only requires a little perseverance to make platyceriums among the most popular plants for decorations. I have a plant which has been in the house for some weeks and it is as good now as when it first came; in fact, it is making growth. It is much admired broad basal fronds and a few long ones radiating out. The plant referred to above has five fronds about eighteen inches long, some shorter ones, and the pot is entirely covered with the broad, shell-like basal ones and can only be moistened by standing it in water.

Although the platyceriums will grow on a piece of wood, I find more liberal treatment encourages better growth. Plenty of sphagnum and peat, with a little dried cow manure or artificial fertilizer, or even liquid manure, will help them. The best way to increase the stock is to fix the stock plant on blocks of peat. The roots soon penetrate and bulbils are formed which develop into young plants. This does not apply to all. Grande, as an instance, never produces bulbils and can only be propagated from spores, which should be sown on sphagnum, crock dust, and peat.

PHILODENDRON SODIROI.

Several of the philodendrons are unsuitable for making shapely ornamental plants, but the species illustrated, P. Sodiroi, is one that makes a handsome specimen. As all the species are native of tropical America, they require a warm, moist atmosphere, our summer nights in the north being often too cool though by no means a plant for the commercial florist, it is rich and ornamental for the warm conservatory. Its handsome leaves are described as milky white above with reddish veins. W. S.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Patrick Creighton.

Patrick Creighton, aged 85, died April 26 at his home on Frank street, McKees Rocks, Pa. He was born in Ireland and came to this country in 1846. He was a member of the Roman Catholic church. Three daughters, three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren survive.

Mrs M. A. Farrington.

Mrs. M. A. Farrington, until recently proprietor of the Fairview Greenhouses, at Victoria, B. C., died last week. She sold out last summer and took a trip to California for the benefit of her health, returning home about a month ago.

Charles Balderston.

Charles Balderston, a well-known rose grower at Colora, Md., died April 28, after an illness with the grip. He was 61 years old. Mr. Balderston was renowned for his success with Jacqueminot, of which he had for many years sent some splendid flowers to city markets.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

Our large forcers of market roses have in some cases had strange and even disastrous experiences this season. Visiting some large forced rose growing establishments during last January, I heard many complaints of the manner in which pot roses growing for cut bloom were behaving, in some cases whole houses of many thousands absolutely refusing to grow or to respond to the application of heat and forcing treatment, except in a very slow, irregular and unsatisfactory way. It is the practice to get the pot roses under glass and gradually give them more and more heat some considerable time before Christmas, if the roses are required to be cut in the early spring months. In the last week in January, or thereabouts, the buds should be assuming considerable size, but many of the houses I inspected were only then getting into growth and had buds in some instances no larger than oat grains, in spite of the fact that the grower had given them precisely the same treatment as in the previous year, which should have produced growth fully a month in advance of what was actually done.

Many were the theories advanced by the various growers as to the cause of this costly loss of time and cultivation, and for the benefit of American growers who may have had a similar experience I give the two most likely theories as told to me by the largest and oldest growers. One theory was that the whole trouble arose from the ripening of the wood in the hot weather experienced during the summer of 1906, the prolonged hot weather and comparative absence of rain causing the sap to dry up and the bark to become very hard and dry and very tightly compressed round the inner wood. Thus, when required to be forced, there was not sufficient sap in the plant, and even what there was could not work freely, owing to the hard and tight nature of the outside bark. It is a well-known fact that the quicker the sap of a

by every one who sees it. It is a handsome plant, of the best type of Alcicorne. I am not sure if I have mentioned it before, but a friend writing from America told me that he had made a specialty of them and used them with great effect for house decorations. The small, dense-growing plants are not so desirable as those grown well, with to grow them well. From spring until fall, their growing season, they should be copiously watered and consequently the drainage of the pot or pan should be ample and the compost of very porous material, some fibrous loam with peat, small lumps of charcoal and chopped sphagnum moss. Less water should be given during winter. Al-plant can be got into motion the quicker will the growth be made. In the opinion of some the foregoing fault can be remedied by more copious supplies of water during these hot, dry summers, and by not practicing the drying off method so heavily when inducing the plant to ripen off.

According to another theory the cause of the trouble was the almost total absence of frost during October and November of 1906 in this country. Practically speaking, up to the time of being taken into the houses for forcing, the plants never felt the effects of a single frost. Consequently they were never properly dormant or ripened, and when forcing commenced they were only partly at rest, or in fact had never had the required rest from the time of ripening to the time of starting into growth again. It is a well-known fact that the longer and better a forcing article is ripened and rested, or in a dormant state, and the more absolute the dormant state is, so much better and quicker will it respond to forcing treatment afterward. The following remedy for this half dormant state was suggested to me: Before placing the plants in the forcing house, subject them to a week or two of a few degrees of frost in an ice chamber, and thus, as it were, put them more soundly to sleep. This process would certainly appear more natural, judging from the behavior of roses grown out of doors, which, it will be noticed, grow better and produce their blooms earlier outside when the preceding winter has been severe. Whether the method would be too costly for commercial use remains for the experimenter to prove, but I imagine the time is coming when every up-to-date market nursery will consider a refrigerating plant on the premises quite as necessary as the heating apparatus.

Winter or American carnations are continuing to make headway in public favor, and although the quantity is increasing rapidly the demand is fully equal to it and prices continue at a profitable level. Certainly they will never become so popular here as in America. In England almost every description of flower is grown and a public demand exists for it, no one flower being very much above anything else in public favor. Judging from appearances, in America roses and carnations absorb three-fourths of the public taste, leaving the host of other flowers to fill up the other quarter. In England the contrary is the case; to a certain extent everything is popular and in demand as its season comes round; consequently those big establishments devoted to practically one cultivation are seldom met with here, but at least a dozen or more subjects are grown in every nursery.

JOHN W. DUNCAN.

John W. Duncan, good gardener that he is, was born at Glack, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, thirty-eight years ago, where his father had charge of the estate and gardens for over thirty years. He served his apprenticeship in gardening under his father and came to America in 1886. His first place on this side of the Atlantic was on the W. D. Pickman estate, Beverly, Mass., one of the finest old places on the now popular North Shore, where he stayed several years. He was next for two years under Mr. Monteith on the G. A. Nickerson estate in Dedham, Mass. This place was at that time famous for its crotons and other stove plants. On leaving there he took charge of the summer estate of J. A. Ramrill, New London, Conn., where he stayed several years. He was next located in Bridgeport, Conn., for two years.

After this he took charge of the estate of W. H. S. Wood, Greenwich, Conn., where in a short time he got together one of the finest collections of trees, shrubs and herbaceous plants to be seen in that section. His frequent contributions from here to the shows of the American Institute in New York were always attractive. About six years ago he removed to Boston to accept the position of assistant superintendent of parks, which he still retains.

Mr. Duncan was for several years secretary of the American Association of Park Superintendents and is now one of its vice-presidents. He is a member of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and since coming to Boston has been a staunch supporter of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club. He is up to date, persistent and progressive, a thorough gardener and a staunch friend.

MENDEL'S THEORY.

"The Mendelian Theory" was the subject of an address at once interesting and instructive, given by P. Murray Thomson, at the March meeting of the Scottish Horticultural Association. In the course of his address Mr. Thomson directed attention to the fact that, although Mendel's paper was published in 1865, it was lost to the world of science till 1900, but that since its discovery numerous experiments have been carried out to test what is now generally known as the Mendelian law. Mendel worked with forms of garden peas possessing characters remaining constant from generation to generation, crossed with other varieties having differentiating constant characters. The lecturer showed, largely by means of diagrams, the results which Mendel observed when experimenting with each of seven pairs of differentiating characters, and the interesting deductions which he drew from them. Crossing tall with dwarf peas, or round, smooth peas with wrinkled, he obtained in the first generation all tall or all round, smooth, according to the pair experimented with, but that on this progeny being self-fertilized, and the resulting seeds grown, the character which had been recessive or suppressed in the first generation reappeared, the plants of the second generation producing tall and dwarf, or round, smooth and wrinkled, in the proportion of three "dominants" to one "recessive." He further observed that while the recessives and one-third of the dominants thereafter continued to breed true, two-thirds of the dominants continued to act as the hybrids of the first generation had done, breaking up into two classes, three-fourths showing the dominant character and one-fourth the recessive. With a knowledge of Mendel's law the work of the hybridist and plant breeder has been much simplified, and the speaker urged all horticulturists, particularly the younger generation, to engage in a little experimental work, believing that thereby their labors would be made more interesting.

THE Proceedings of the Sixteenth Annual Meeting of the American Carnation Society has been issued as a pamphlet of 148 pages. It contains a stenographic report of the Toronto meeting, together with the essays read, and published in the REVIEW at the time, to which is appended a list of carnations registered in 1906 and 1907, and a list of the membership of the society.

Results bring advertising.
The REVIEW brings results.

BE business-like; use a printed letter-head.

THE trade finds collections coming in freely this month.

SPHAGNUM moss is more easily obtained than it was a couple of months ago.

EVERY man you buy of has given prices a boost; why don't you pass it on?

LOOK out for thrips; they recur as regularly as the spring fever, and at the same time.

THE season of hail storms is at hand. Better get under cover—in the Hail Association.

LOOK over your stock of supplies and see that you have all the things needed for Memorial day and the June commencements. Order today anything that may be lacking.

AFTER October 1, 1907, a letter to any country in the postal union may be sent for 5 cents for the first ounce, and 3 cents for each succeeding ounce or fraction of an ounce. At present it is 5 cents for each half ounce.

SEVERAL pieces of badly mutilated mail recently have reached the REVIEW, accompanied by the post-office's explanation that it happened "while passing through the pneumatic tubes." Last week C. W. Benson was the greatest sufferer, the letter containing copy for his half-page advertisement being so badly soaked that the address was illegible and it was returned to him, looking, as he said, "as though it had been through the drainage canal and the Chicago river, as well as the tube."

COLD IN MAY.

Just as the people were beginning to believe the point of human endurance had been reached in eccentric meteorological conditions, the god of unseasonable weather sifted enough snow out of a murky sky to white the city streets until it melted, and in the suburbs, where the greenhouses are, to leave a blanket varying from a half-inch to an inch and a half in thickness. This was May 3, and the temperature at Chicago went down to 34 degrees. The cold weather extended throughout the greater part of the middle western states, snow falling in many states just west of the Mississippi river, and as far east as Ohio. In Nebraska, where a high wind was blowing, drifts large enough to delay trains were formed.

The weather man said it was the coldest May day since 1875, with the single exception of May 14, 1895, when the mercury registered 32 degrees above zero. But there was no snow then. May 2, 1875, there was a temperature of 27 degrees, but still no snow.

THE PRICE OF PIPE.

The price of pipe is becoming a matter of considerable importance to those who are contemplating the erection of new greenhouses, or who have houses under way but have not yet bought the pipe. Not only is the price going up, but the demand is so great that it is becoming difficult to get promise of delivery at any early date. Jobbing houses offer quite a variety of reasons for this. It is said that floods in the Pittsburgh district forced the mills to shut down and threw them behind in their orders. Another report is that the Standard Oil Co. is buying immense quantities of pipe and urging that its orders be delivered first. At any rate, a leading jobber reports that mills at Pittsburgh will only book his orders "open," that is, they will enter them now and along in June or July will notify as to price and date of delivery. That is not a basis on which a jobber can himself give his customers much satisfaction.

But the jobbers still have pipe on hand and it can be had if one wants to pay the price. To illustrate what has taken place, one buyer of wrought iron pipe for greenhouse use says that he bought at the lowest at seventy-eight per cent off the list; the next purchase was at seventy off, the next sixty-six, and now sixty off is quoted. That may not sound so bad, but when you reduce it to dollars and cents it is different. The list price on the sizes mentioned is as follows:

1½ -inch pipe.....	27 cents per foot
2 -inch pipe.....	36 cents per foot
2½ -inch pipe.....	57½ cents per foot
3 -inch pipe.....	75½ cents per foot

Now, at seventy-eight per cent off the list, 1-inch pipe costs net 3.63 cents per foot; at seventy off it costs net 4.75 cents per foot; at sixty-six off it costs net 5.61 cents per foot, and at sixty off it costs net 6.6 cents per foot. Other sizes are in proportion. So really the advance has been, in the period covered by these quotations, about eighty per cent. There is nothing else which enters into greenhouse construction which has advanced so greatly.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

John A. Macrae, Providence, R. I., February 6, submitted for registration Chrysanthemum Golden Dome, a sport of Yellow Eaton 1904; form of Bonnaillon, color deeper yellow, but same characteristics of growth, habit and size of flower; darker foliage than parent; height between three and one-half and four feet.

A. C. Zvolanek, Bound Brook, N. J., February 28 submitted the following new Christmas flowering sweet peas: Le Marquis, seedling from Wm. J. Stewart x Gladys Unwin, violet blue; Mrs. George Lewis, seedling from Watching x Gladys Unwin, white; Mrs. A. Zvolanek, seedling from Helen Pierce x Christmas White, white, blue notched; Mrs. Chas. H. Totty, seedling from Mrs. Alexander Wallace; a light blue unnamed seedling, sky blue.

Alexander Montgomery, Waban Rose Conservatory, Natick, Mass., March 18, submitted for registration Rose White Killarney, a sport from Killarney, with same form, habit and more petalage; clear white. P. J. HAUSWIRTH, Sec'y.

LADIES' AUXILIARY.

As the work of the Ladies' Auxiliary, S. A. F., progresses, I find many of the 800 circulars sent out November 8, 1906, found a resting place in the waste basket, as I have been informed by some of the members of the S. A. F. Therefore, through the trade papers, I invite all ladies who are in the trade, directly or indirectly, to join the auxiliary and meet with us at Philadelphia next summer. MRS. CHAS. H. MAYNARD, Sec'y.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market still is active, but not nearly so strong as in the fortnight preceding the last week. For some reason difficult to explain, the local retailers are doing no great amount of business outside of funeral work, although this keeps them fairly busy. The out of town demand is brisk, but it has shown some falling off as crops have increased. This is a general condition always to be reckoned with. When crops increase in Chicago they also increase with all the growers in the Mississippi valley, and these growers stop buying. Then when crops go off, they go off not only in Chicago, but through a considerable range of territory, and many who have been wholesaling are forced to buy for their retail needs. This in a large measure accounts for the wide fluctuations in the Chicago market.

Within the week there has been some little increase in production and some little decline in out of town demand. The rose market continues about as it has been. Beauties are a little less abundant, but still enough to meet the demand. There continue to be large supplies of fancy roses of all other varieties, and an especially strong demand for shorts. Richmond is in especially good supply and there are some splendid Chatenay. Because of the amount of funeral work the shorts are cleaned up first and bring relatively better prices than the higher grade. This is a condition almost without precedent in this market. Usually it is the fancy stock which sells quickest.

Carnations are increasing in supply. It is noted that the city buyers are using few carnations but that the call from outside is strong. While the available quantities are greater, prices are holding firm. The weather has suited carnations well and the quality is ahead of the usual standard for this season of the year.

There is a big business being done in sweet peas. Blanche Ferry is the most common variety. No great quantity of white is received, but there are only a few of the special fancy colors. The better the quality the quicker the peas sell, prices ranging from 50 cents to $2 per hundred. There is a strong demand for valley.

With the continued cool weather, violets are holding on later than ever. Bulbous stock is about gone. The few remaining jonquils and daffodils sell well. The outdoor stock does not cut so large a figure as usual, but it may come later. Callas and Easter lilies sell well but are equal to requirements. Pansies are popular.

There is a good sale for all greens. This market always can supply anything needed in greens if the order is placed before the morning rush has cleaned up the day's receipts. Ferns are moving well at all sorts of prices. There are now four varieties of hardy ferns in the market; cold storage stock, spring pick from Massachusetts, spring pick from Michigan and southern stock. The cold storage stock, where good, is commanding much the highest price.

Carnations Frosted.

Some of the growers began planting carnations in the field before the usual date, regardless of the backwardness of the season. This is what Joseph P. Brooks, Morton Grove, has to say about it:

"I have some of the highest sand and gravel land in the neighborhood, where I grow my carnations for benching, and as my land can be worked and put in shape early I always start early. Later the land becomes too dry and the plants do not take hold as well. Last year I started planting April 20, beginning with Lawson. They were hit by a hard frost about a week later. I remember they looked much injured, but they turned out all right. This time we had the temperature down to 26 degrees and cannot yet tell what harm has been done. Some of the plants look sleepy, but others seem all right and fresh and my idea is that it will not have hurt them much. Several of my neighbors started planting with me, but ceased when it turned cold, and are now making a fresh start, though some are waiting for a warm rain before starting. For my part, I don't mind the cold. I am hard at it every day and by Monday had out about 70,000 plants of Queen and several thousands of other varieties."

The Peony Prospects.

It is nearly six weeks since the first of the season's peonies reached this market. There was a period of a month following the first receipts when no peonies were seen. For the last week or ten days there have been a few dozens of Old Red, but the long continued cold weather is holding back the crop. It is reported that last week's drop in temperature did much damage in the Missouri and southern Illinois fields from which the first supplies come and to which this market looks for Decoration day. The full extent of the injury will not be known until a few warm days have moved the stock along.

Practically no outdoor flowers are seen in the market. We had a deluge of them a few days just before Easter. That was three or four weeks earlier than normal. Then came the cold and now the season is two or three weeks later than usual. The crop of peonies will be an important factor in the market for Decoration day.

The Weather in April.

It was the coldest April since 1874. The mean temperature was 40 degrees, where in 1906 it was 51 degrees and the average for thirty-seven years is 46 degrees. There was 2.37 inches rainfall and two inches of snow. There were seven clear days, eight partly cloudy and fifteen cloudy. The wind averaged seventeen miles an hour. There was killing frost as late as April 26.

May started off with snow May 3, from half an inch to an inch and a half deep.

Funeral Work.

As explaining the heavy run of funeral work it may be stated that Chicago's death rate for the first four months of 1907 was greater than in any corresponding period since 1899, according to the bulletin of the health department. Abnormal weather conditions are held greatly responsible. Pneumonia leads as a death cause, with 2,405 victims since January 1. This is an excess over the corresponding months of 1906 of 549. There were 222 more deaths due to scarlet fever, 191 more due to heart disease, and 153 more due to consumption.

The mortality of the last week exceeds that of any seven days since the week ending February 28. There were 764 deaths, an annual death rate of 18.90 per 1,000, and an increase of eighty-six over the week before.

Various Notes.

The Schillo Lumber Co. reports much trouble in getting cars to bring pecky cypress from the south. They have sold large quantities of this bench material and would like to get hold of a big lot that is being air-dried in the south, but it is coming along in dribbles because of the car shortage.

Before the death of Mrs. Louise Schiller, plans had been nearly completed for the building of a new store and greenhouse almost directly across the street from the present establishment at 897 West Madison street, but on account of Mrs. Schiller's death the work of erection has been deferred till next year.

The city plans to build a sewer in Robey street, but a number of the property owners protest, claiming that it is not necessary. Wiator Bros. are one of these. It makes quite a difference to them, as they have 500 feet of frontage on which the special assessment would be spread.

Ed. Kissingen, at Fullerton and Milwaukee avenues, is building a conservatory.

Bassett & Washburn report that they have a large number of lilies which they are growing cool for Memorial day.

All the large growers of young stock of carnations, chrysanthemums and roses report excellent business the last few weeks. The carnation cuttings are pretty well sold out and chrysanthemums now in the height of the season.

The A. Dietsch Co. reports that the season's business shows one important change as compared with other years. Ordinarily February and March are the largest months in the matter of booking orders, but this season April exceeded the two preceding months. It always is characteristic that the larger orders are booked early, so that the April increase indicates additions by a large number of growers.

There has been much litigation with regard to the drainage canal, which is being built on the north side. This was originally planned to cut diagonally through Peter Reinberg's "farm." The direction has now been changed so that it skirts the property and adds to its value instead of detracting from it. A switch has been put in and a new range of six houses, each 300 feet long, is being erected.

Louis Wittbold has completed a mold, by means of which he will erect cement benches all in one piece. It looks so good a thing to him that he contemplates taking out a patent and putting the mold on the market.

Ed. Blameuser, at Niles Center, is remodeling his residence and adding two greenhouses, 18x125, to his plant. His brother, Emil, is building two new houses, each 25x125.

Anton Dietsch is in Colorado, intending to be absent until the middle of the summer.

The Florists' Club holds its monthly meeting at Handel hall May 9. Club meetings now open promptly at 8 p. m. and there is something of special interest every night.

Sol. Garland, at Des Plaines, has been sending Percy Jones a remarkably steady cut of carnations all through the season. Asked as to how he manages to maintain his cut so evenly, he said he thinks it is due to his method of disbudding in the field. Instead of disbudding all the stock at one time, he disbudded part every day. The result was that the plants had growths in all stages of development.

J. W. Breaky has a new store at 3915 Cottage Grove avenue and is doing a nice business. It is the stand occupied ever so many years by H. & R. Hilmer, the Art Floral Co.

Mrs. Clark's ladies' lunch club, at 33

Randolph street, now supplies a large part of the wholesale cut flower market with its daily luncheon. Men are not admitted to the lunch club, but as they also must eat, the lunch club sends a box of food to them upon request.

Ed. Benthley broke two bones in his right hand through a fall on the bowling alleys May 2.

Miss Stella Tonner is to be married Saturday evening, May 11, and go to Russell, Kan., to reside. She is a younger sister of Walter Tonner and the Misses Tonner, of Randall's and the Flower Market. It is reported her home will be on a 2,000-acre farm, owned by the groom.

Emil Buettner is no longer forcing valley for the wholesale market.

Ranson Kennicott went to Carbon-dale Monday to superintend the shipment of the spring crop of peonies and other outdoor flowers. He will return in season to handle the Kennicott local crop of these flowers.

E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., was at home ill Sunday and Monday. There are none more assiduous in their devotion to business than he, and it is a matter for special note when the visitor fails to find him on deck.

A. L. Randall and Mrs. Randall are spending the week at West Baden.

A florists' baseball team has been organized with W. P. Kyle as manager. The players are young men from both wholesale and retail stores and they say they have a fast team. The first game of the season was played at Washington park last Sunday. It is expected to arrange for a game there each Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

P. J. Hauswirth is at Moline this week, attending a state meeting of the Red Men.

House cleaning has begun in the wholesale district. The first to get at this annual task is the Poehlman Bros. Co. They now have finished the rearrangement of their enlarged store and will shortly have things in first-class shape.

L. Coatsworth returned last week from a trip to Idaho, where he and a friend

J. P. Risch now resides at 5343 Jackson avenue.

Will Graff returned to Columbus Monday evening after having spent a week in this market. He says they have had considerable trouble through carnations being asleep when they reached Columbus. He has convinced himself that the fault lies with the express company, and not at all with the shippers, and he thinks he has made enough noise around the general offices in Chicago so that cut flower boxes will get at least a little of the great amount of special attention the express companies tell us is given flower shipments.

The J. B. Deamud Co. is handling considerable quantities of gladioli.

A delegation went to Springfield May 7 to look into the matter of the hoped-for appropriation for experimental greenhouses at Urbana. The prospects, recently so bright, are thought to have been clouded by recent political developments at the capital.

W. E. Wadsworth has returned from St. Louis and is again in his old position with the George Wittbold Co.

Among the week's visitors were A. L.

Glaser, Des Moines, Ia., buying material for the rebuilding of a large part of his establishment; Irving Gingrich, of the South Bend Floral Co., South Bend, Ind.; F. W. Heckenkamp, Jr., Quincy, Ill., buying building material.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The week opened with just the weather needed in Oklahoma and Kansas; a warm rain and a thorough one precedes the certain coming of the summer temperature. Before the week is over we will forget there was a six months' winter and that freezing cold extended into May. No such season recurs to the memories of the oldest florist in New York. Still, there is much to be thankful for. Business is almost universally encouraging and the outlook is brighter every year, as population grows.

There has been but little change in wholesale prices of cut flowers since a week ago. The best Beauties grew scarce and some of them touched 25 cents again. With a few days of sunshine there will be the usual retrogression peculiar to the season. Of all other roses there is an abundance and prices hold at last week's quoted figures.

Carnations have been the most independent of the cut flowers; prices have been well maintained. Quality cannot be excelled.

The market was depleted of orchids early because of the large number required for the funeral decoration at the burial of "Silent" Smith. McManus had one order for over 1,200 Cattleya Mossiae. It speaks well for his resources when such a call can be met promptly. The Rosary and Leikens received the bulk of the family orders. The designs were unique and elaborate, the best being a standing wreath and cross of orchids. Gardenias have fallen to the lowest quotations of the year. Of lilies there are enough and to spare.

Spring flowers are coming fast, and apple and cherry blossoms enliven the retail windows. Fenrich had a large shipment of southern lilac Monday. The first southern peonies, the early red variety, were received by J. K. Allen Monday. From now on there will be no lack of anything seasonable and the spring weddings will have novelty and abundance to draw upon.

Club Meeting.

Circumstances necessitate a change in the place of meeting, and therefore the monthly session of the Florists' Club will be held at the Hotel Earlington, 50 West

GARDENIA GRANDIFLORA CAPE JASMINE

We expect to begin cutting about May 10, and shall have between 200,000 and 300,000 flowers to dispose of. Our bushes are in fine, healthy condition and we believe we shall have the best stock ever put on the market. We oversee our own packing and cull out poor, bad foliated buds. The illustration in this advertisement is 1-16 the real size of the buds. The flowers are waxy white, with a delightful fragrance, which is retained after shipping. The foliage is a dark, glossy green. They carry well to all parts of United States.

Dear Sirs:—Please send me $2.00 worth of Cape Buds, class A., to reach here by May 26, if possible. The flowers you sent last year were the best that ever came here. And oblige,

MESSRS. COOK & COOK,

Dear Sirs:—Flowers arrived here today in first-class shape. They are very satisfactory. Many thanks for filling the order so carefully.

Twenty-seventh street, next Monday evening, May 13. An especially good meeting is anticipated. S. S. Skidelsky will deliver an address in behalf of the national flower show and the Rickards brothers will sing, while the expert caterer will "cate" as usual. Be there.

Various Notes.

John Ringier, brother of Arnold Ringier, of Chicago, has returned to his native land in quest of renewed health and will spend the summer in Switzerland.

Sigmund Geller leaves early in June for his annual business tour in Europe.

A. J. Guttman returns Wednesday from Cuba and will give his observations on tropical fruits and flowers at the club meeting.

There have been lively doings on Twenty-eighth street. Mr. Sheridan's plate-glass window was mysteriously broken. Mr. Nugent swept the entrance clean of an obstreperous colored demonstration which obscured the vision and later in self-defense a native American won a Marathon by overcoming a representative of the race that defended the pass with Leonidas at Thermopylae. After the storm all has been placid and peaceful, but Twenty-eighth is a lively street now that the wholesalers are gathering there so fast. Gunther Bros. are already settled and will soon have their new store in up-to-date condition at No. 114, while across the way Kervan has rented the whole building and is moving in this week.

Hiram T. Jones has completed the outside planting at the Hotel Knickerbocker.

The New York dailies on Monday were profuse in reports of the overthrow of the U. S. Express Co. in its long fight against the flower growers of New York and vicinity. It is said that to F. L. Moore, of Chatham, N. J., special credit is due for the splendid testimony he gave before the commission. It was his experimental shipping of the boxes that clearly revealed the injustice of the express company's charges.

On the occasion of his leaving Great Neck, April 27, to fill a position on the Hudson, James Bell, superintendent for C. Mayre, was entertained at supper at F. Kane's hotel. John Ingram occupied the chair and, after supper, presented Mr. Bell, in the name of his many friends, with a handsome 400-day time-piece. Mr. Bell feelingly replied. Alex. Lothian gave a fine address; also Messrs. Matthews, Walker and Hoyer. A pleasant evening was spent with song and story. Mr. Lothian, as toastmaster, proposed the health of Mr. and Mrs. Bell and family. The chairman moved a vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. F. Kane for the splendid supper. The company broke up by singing "Auld Lang Syne."

John Reese, lately with Bonnet & Blake, has bought the retail store at 301 Flatbush avenue, formerly owned by Miss Koch, of Flatbush. Mr. Reese has had experience in all departments of the business and should succeed. Miss Koch will soon accept congratulations from her many friends on the occasion of her marriage to Julius Roehrs, Jr., of Rutherford, N. J.

Last week I stated there had been some closings of retail stores lately that were no credit to the trade. The wholesalers tell me this was putting the matter very mildly. In one case especially it is said to be much easier to name those who escaped than the multitude who were bitten. There are too many barn doors locked after the horse has got away.

Reed & Keller have received notice of the granting of a patent for their famous cycas-leaf holder. Their latest inventions are bamboo canopies, glass hangers and screens. The latter, a three-winged affair, cannot fail to become popular, as it reduces cost to a minimum. The firm has an exhibit this week at the Quincy house in Boston.

The firm of Wm. H. Brower's Sons, 428 Fifth avenue, was dissolved April 30 by mutual consent. John L. Brower will conduct the business at the old stand. Lorenzo Brower will have an office in the Coogan building and devote his attention to special and family work, a new departure, which by persistence and close attention to his patrons' interests cannot fail to win.

John Myers came to this country forty-one years ago. He rented a block of land from the Astor estate, at Ninetieth street and Broadway, for $500 a year, and has been doing business there all these years, while on every side of him the city grew and buildings rose. Fifty-ninth street was the end of New York in those days. For forty years Mr. Myers has been subject to a thirty-day notice of removal from his acre and a half and million-dollar block. At last it has arrived. The greenhouses are down, the building of great structures has begun and one of the oldest landmarks of New York flower growing has passed away. Mr. Myers is 65 years old and has fairly earned his competence and rest.

Perkins & Schumann have risen. They now occupy a store five or six times larger than their last and on the first floor of the Coogan building, a most convenient place in every way and just what they needed for their growing trade.

The Cut Flower Exchange, at its annual meeting Saturday, reelected John Snyder president and Alexander Burns, Edward Matthews, Philip Einsman and George Golsner directors. The opening hour was restored to 6 a. m. instead of 5 a. m., as has been the rule since Christmas.

E. Bonnot, of Jersey City, is now visiting his old home, Paris, France, and in his letters to his brother in the Coogan building, asserts that in elaborate and beautiful fitting up the Parisians' retail stores are in advance of our own.

A. M. Henshaw was confined to his home last week with a severe case of the grip.

Traendly & Schenck are building a large addition to their store, evidently in anticipation of increased shipments this season.

Ford Bros. call attention to the way the quality and crop is holding out this season with their carnation growers.

The Market.

The weather for May has so far proved unusually cold. As a consequence there is no such glut in the market as sometimes occurs at this season. Taken all in all, business remains fairly good. Thanks in principal part to the cool weather, roses and carnations both continue of extra good quality, with prices much the same as a week ago. Light pink carnations, like Enchantress, are holding their color finely this season. A few straggling double violets are still seen, but the present week will finish them. Sweet peas sell fairly well and quite a variety of shades is procurable. Easter lilies and callas are both abundant.

There is rather less bulbous stock, in the way of tulips and narcissi. That coming from the open is backward, owing to the cold weather. Spanish iris is abundant, of fine quality and sells moderately well. Marguerites remain good sellers. Some good stocks are seen, and quite a variety of miscellaneous flowers.

Exhibition.

There was a smaller show than usual May 4, at Horticultural hall. The morning was bitter cold, with a driving rain, and some exhibits of azaleas and calceolarias were not forthcoming. Nevertheless, there was an interesting exhibition.

Martin Sullivan, gardener to W. Whitman, won first prize for six zonal pelargoniums. He also showed some good plants of show and fancy varieties. For twelve large pans of Darwin tulips, distinct, Mr. Sullivan also won, with a beautiful collection, finely grown. He was also first for twelve pans, twelve inches in diameter, of other varieties of late tulips.

There were numerous displays of narcissi. For fifty vases, not less than ten varieties, W. N. Craig was first, W. Whitman second, and W. J. Clemson, J. O. Kristensen gardener, third. All the more popular narcissi were shown, as well as many of the new and rarer varieties.

For forty-eight tulips, W. Whitman was first and W. J. Clemson second. Mrs. A. W. Blake, John L. Smith gardener, led for forty-eight pansies, distinct, with a splendid lot; Mrs. E. M. Gill, second.

There were a good number of miscellaneous non-competitive exhibits. J. T. Butterworth received a silver medal for a beautifully flowered Cattleya Mossiae in an 8-inch pot carrying fifty-nine flowers. The same plant carried forty-four flowers in 1906. W. Whitman had well flowered plants of Cattleya Skinneri and C. Mossiae. Mrs. A. W. Blake showed Himalayan Rhododendron formosum, some fine auriculas and a collection of narcissi. Mrs. Frederick Ayer, Geo. Page gardener, had a magnificent lot of Marchal Niel rose, several large shoots smothered with bloom, and awarded a cultural certificate. The same exhibitor received honorable mention for well flowered plants of Acacia pulchella. Mrs. Page also had a collection of Spanish

Horticultural Society.

The following special prizes will be offered at the chrysanthemum show in November, in addition to the regular prizes contained in the schedule issued in January:

For 100 cut chrysanthemums, one or more varieties, arranged in the society's large china vases, four prizes; $40, $30, $20, $10. Competition open to all.

For the best table 6x8, of cut chrysanthemums, all classes admissible, commercial growers only, four prizes; $40, $30, $20, $10.

For the best table 6x8, of cut chrysanthemums arranged with autumn foliage or other decorative material, for retail store florists only, four prizes; $40, $30, $20, $10.

For the best vase of fifty roses, any one variety, competition open to all, three prizes; $50, $30, $20.

For the best six vases of carnations, distinct, fifty blooms in a vase, competition open to all, four prizes; $40, $30, $20, $10.

For the best table 6x8, of fruit, both native and foreign fruits admissible, and berries and autumn foliage to be used to produce a pleasing effect, four prizes; $40, $30, $20, $10.

For a collection of vegetables, fifteen varieties, for private gardens only, to be judged according to a scale of points given. First prize, silver cup valued at $75, offered by R. & J. Farquhar & Co.; $25, $15, $10.

For best centerpiece of growing plants for a table of eight covers, three prizes; $12, $8, $5. These prizes are offered by the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston.

The New England Dahlia Society will offer some $600 in special prizes at its first annual show, in Horticultural hall, in September. This is in addition to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's regular prizes.

There will be a special exhibition of tulips and other late bulbous flowers, etc., at Horticultural hall, Saturday, May 18. It would pay commercial growers to visit this show and note the names of the many fine Darwin and other late tulips which are invaluable for Memorial day trade.

General S. M. Weld has invited the trustees of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society to visit his estate in Dedham May 11.

Owing to the lateness of the season, the annual rhododendron exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will be held June 8, in lieu of June 1, as previously arranged.

Various Notes.

William Nicholson finds that marguerites have sold better this year than ever before. His sales average 10,000 per week, and many more could be disposed of.

William H. Elliott will plant his large new house, at Madbury, N. H., with Richmond and Killarney, in the culture of which varieties he is in the front rank.

James Farquhar has a fine batch of seedling lilioms which he is watching with much interest. They are crosses between L. Philippinense, L. longiflorum, L. Krameri, etc., and Mr. Farquhar hopes to bloom quite a number during the present year.

Superintendent Kirkland is preparing for an active campaign against the gypsy and brown-tailed moths throughout the state. Some of the parasites introduced here wintered well and great hopes are placed on the work they will do in the future.

Local nurseries report an unusually busy season. The cool spring has materially assisted them in keeping pace with their orders.

Superintendent Pettigrew is particularly busy this season, doing a great deal of planting of shrubbery in the park system.

Tulips in the Boston Public Gardens are later than usual and will be at their height about May 12. W. N. CRAIG.

Floating a Boiler.

South Park Floral Co. is almost too large a name for this strenuous age, so I am now running the business under my own name. I started here three years ago with two houses, each 20x50 feet. Last summer I built a carnation house, 25x127. We are now building a rose house, 25x50. I do my own erecting of houses. The Moninger Co. furnished the material for the rose house. We grow a general line of stock.

I did a caper that I do not think anyone else in the business has ever done. That is, I bought a first-class sixty horsepower locomotive type of boiler, with sixty 3-inch flues, and it was on the other side of the river and four miles above town, in an almost inaccessible place. I could not get a drayman in our town of 18,000 people to contract to move the boiler. I worked my knowledge box overtime and figured that the blamed old thing ought to float. So I closed all openings and pumped fifteen pounds air pressure into it, and as it was lying within a hundred feet of the river I rigged up a set of skids and rolled it into the river. I had two men in a yawl with me, and we towed it down the river about four miles and pulled it out on my side, where I could get draymen to handle it. Our local papers gave me a nice bit of free advertising about it.

Work Made Lighter.

If there is anything I enjoy it is to sit in my armchair after a hard day's work and muse over all the interesting things you publish in the REVIEW every week; so instructive, so edifying, so encouraging; it makes work lighter for us. We have had a very peculiar spring—so very warm in March, soaring to 90 degrees in the shade and making everybody in a rush to plant trees and shrubs; but so cold in April that planting has been much delayed. I have had a busy season so far.

ROBERT FULSTONE.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS.

Will you please tell me what is the cause of my geraniums turning crimson? The edge of the leaf will first show red and finally the entire leaf turns a brilliant crimson. Plants are not growing. I at first thought too much bone meal was used in the compost, but I now find that some of the plants show the same trouble that had no fertilizer. They are in 3-inch pots, and the pots placed on a bench that has two inches of wood shavings, getting full sunshine and located in the lightest and airiest part of the house. What can I do to overcome it? E. H. O.

Without knowing something of the local conditions and treatment it is difficult to tell what can have caused the coloring of the leaves referred to. I presume the plants are not too much potbound and have been carefully watered. If intended for late spring sales there is little time left now to tone them up. I would scratch over the surface of the soil and if the pots are well filled with roots give a watering with nitrate of soda once in four or five days. This should make the plants greener very soon. I think it possible that too much bone may have been used, but the fact that other plants, in the compost for which no bone was used, are also in the same condition, leads me to think that either the plants have been starved or underwatered. I think the use of nitrate of soda or some other quick acting chemical fertilizer will improve them. C. W.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The first week in May brings rather unusual conditions. Owing to the cool, dark weather which has prevailed for a fortnight or more, flowers where they have been cared for are in excellent condition; unusually good value for the prices prevailing. There is, of course, considerable rubbish of little or no value. Business has fallen off, the demand being weak and irregular, especially on white flowers. Colored stock is much better value. Carnations have again become rather scarce, prices holding well for the season, excepting on whites. Sweet peas have fallen, the best being one-third lower than ten days ago. Violets can still be had, owing to the cool weather.

Cornflowers have made their appearance in fair quantity. Candytuft is an addition to the list. Valley is in fair demand; the outdoor stock has not as yet made any impression. Cattleya Mossiae is of excellent quality and plentiful; other orchids are over. Beauties are fine, plentiful, and good value. Tea roses are selling well for the better grades, poorly for the ordinary. Liberty and Richmond are not in especial demand. Harrisii lilies are scarcer, the best bringing higher prices. Daisies are fine and plentiful. Dagger ferns are extremely scarce.

Wyncote.

It always is a pleasure to go over the houses of the Joseph Heacock Co., near Jenkintown station, P. & R. No matter what season of the year you may happen to visit them, order and cleanliness always prevail. The palm range is devoted largely to kentias, as of yore, two-thirds Belmoreana and one-third Forsteriana. The stock is in vigorous condition, showing only the ravages of the buyer, a parasite who threatens to destroy certain sizes before August if unchecked. There are, however, thousands more in the next lower sizes coming rapidly forward. The features of the larger kentias are the introduction of the 9-inch and of the 12-inch tubs, which have now supplanted pots of those sizes. These tubs, noted before in these columns, are very desirable for the decorator, as they cannot be broken, and are easily handled. From a grower's standpoint the moisture of the wood is more beneficial to root action than the pots, which so readily dry out.

A change is noted in the system of making up plants. In Forsteriana, especially, 12-inch tubs are now made up from the specimen 8-inch plants, surrounded by smaller 5-inch plants. This is preferred to the old method of making them up in 6-inch from a 4-inch plant and some smaller plants around it. Belmoreana, while more expensive, is occasionally made up for buyers who prefer this variety for its grace.

One house of Areca lutescens is now growing into condition. This variety had been almost discarded, but was taken up again to meet the market requirements. Cocos Weddelliana is grown in limited quantities for fern dishes.

Among the ferns were some specimens of Nephrolepis Bostoniensis Harrisii in 12-inch pans on pedestals. The plain Boston fern is grown to some extent in 5-inch and 6-inch pots; also N. Whitmani and N. Barrowsii. A few plants of Cibotium Schiedeii are also grown.

The rose par excellence of the place is American Beauty, house after house being filled with this variety, tall and leafy as a forest, with thousands of their little ones in 2 1/4 x 3-inch pots near by.

Liberty, Richmond and Killarney are also grown, the first largely.

Two additions, made recently, add dignity to the establishment, the first a handsome office with open brick fireplace, an air of substantial comfort pervading; under it a well-built cement vault containing an ice-box for holding the roses. Some fine carnations on a shelf in the vault gave evidence of well-grown stock in those houses.

The Market.

Cut flower trade has been only fair. Weather conditions were unfavorable, making it hard on the growers, retailers and wholesalers. A great deal of funeral work helped out greatly with the store men. The greenhouse men feel gloomy over the weather, as little planting out could be done. At the wholesale houses we find the usual scarcity in carnations, with prices away up on all varieties. White had a great demand, with 4 cents about the average price. Lawson and Enchantress were also in demand, only few reds coming in.

In roses there is a different story to tell, as there is an actual glut of them in the market, and extra good stock at that, with plenty of extra fine long American Beauties, which went begging all week. Bride, Maid, Chatenay, Richmond and Perle are many more than the demand calls for, and shorts sold as low as $5 per thousand.

Callas and Harrisii, too, are plentiful and cheap; also lily of the valley has gone down a cent or two in price. The quality is fine. Sweet peas are becoming more plentiful, with a good demand for pink and white. Fancy ferns have gone

SNAILS OR SLUGS.

Please tell us the best remedy for snails or slugs. E. N.

Prof. Jarvis, at the last meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Association, spoke as follows on these:

"Snails or slugs are not insects, but belong to the group of animals known as mollusca, soft-bodied creatures frequently covered with a shell. They attack many species of greenhouse plants, lettuce, violets, etc.

"They prefer moist situations, hence drainage, where practicable, is a preventive and a remedy. Trapping with cabbage leaves, sweetened bran, etc., is the usual practice and clear, weak lime-water sprinkled over the plants and on the soil will drive them out."

PITTSBURG FLORISTS' CLUB.

The Pittsburgh and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club has the following officers: President, John W. Jones; vice-president, E. C. Reineman; treasurer, Fred Burki; secretary, H. P. Joslin; assistant secretary, E. C. Ludwig. P. S. Randolph, John Bader and Fred Burki are the executive committee. Vegetable Forcing.

MARKET growers of vegetables under glass, many of whom also grow crops in the open, will be interested in the bulletin "Beans," just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

TRUCKERS will be interested in Bulletin No. 282, entitled "Celery," just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., which will send a copy free on request.

THE old saying that it is an ill wind that blows nobody good is well illustrated in the present season. Although truckers everywhere are far behind and heavy losers, the growth of greenhouse vegetables is getting the best prices ever realized at this season.

SPRING CROP OF LETTUCE.

If the last crop of the season is just about completed and those in the coldframes almost ready to cut, the conditions for a continuous supply will be all right. Where coldframes are not depended on so much, another crop in the greenhouse will have to be under way to keep up the supply to meet the first outdoor crop, which will be later than usual this year.

Some of the larger growers do not trouble much with coldframes, but with us the coldframe crops are the most satisfactory of the season. True, the earlier crop for some time after planting requires a good deal of attention in regard to covering and protecting during cold spells, but once the warm spring weather sets in this trouble is reduced to a minimum and the plants seem to grow along without any trouble. We have never had a case of disease in the frames. This in itself is a strong argument in favor of frame culture.

Plants intended for subsequent planting in the open ground should have attention in regard to hardening off before the time of setting out arrives. This time differs considerably with the locality. We can usually trust them outdoors before this date, but this is an exceptional season. But even if the temperature will sometimes run a little below the freezing point, if not too severe a little frost will not do much harm, provided the plants are well hardened off. If protection can be given during cold nights they could be set in the open ground even earlier than this, but where large plantings are made, covering is hardly practicable. Two good varieties, the two best we have tried, are Boston Market and Big Boston. Hardiness is one of their strong points, but the quality and flavor are also there.

Radishes are another very satisfactory frame crop. We now are pulling from the frames and have made preparations for a continuous supply up to the Seed Trade News.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907

SEEDSMEN will appreciate the illustration on page 1889 of this issue.

TUBEROSE and other flowering bulbs that were scarce and high some time ago are now offered freely.

THE canners report a poor prospect for a pea crop. A light pack will increase the demand for seed peas for next season.

IF collections turn out as good as anticipated the jobbers will have little fault to find with the final result of the 1907 seed business.

ALL lines of the seed trade are still feeling the effects of unseasonably cold weather. Reports from all sections show that the depression is general.

J. E. FARRINGTON does business at Anadarko, Okla., and Chickasha, I. T., handling seeds and intending to go more heavily into this line another season.

THERE is a hopeful feeling that the weather will get warm enough to plant sweet corn before it is too late; so far the demand for corn is far below normal.

It is sometimes surprising how much vitality there is in seeds. Some of the early vegetables, after lying six weeks in the cold, wet ground, are germinating nicely.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in Farmers' Bulletin No. 282, entitled "Celery," just issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The author is W. R. Beattie.

THE market gardeners are becoming pretty well discouraged. The season is the most unfavorable ever experienced and the conditions are general. In the long run, the seed trade will also be loser.

THE M. G. Madson Seed Co., Manitowoc, Wis., in addition to its retail and catalogue seed business, handles fruit trees, small fruits, roses, bulbs, and allied lines. The season is late this year, but good.

IN Germany, as in this country, onion seed was among the short items this season, except Giant Yellow Zittau, which was in abundance owing to the unusually large plantations in 1906, and the price of this sort went down lower than ever.

EDWARD RIGG, JR., Burlington, N. J., is advertising in the May issues of farm papers as follows: "Onion seed—Prize-taker, $1 per lb.; Southport Yellow Globe, $1.50 per lb.; Southport White Globe, $2 per lb. Subject to being unsold."

THE suburban amateur gardener has a grudge against the weather man. The gardens and lawns that looked so well at this time last year are barren, undug and generally going to the bad. There is no question about a lack of enthusiasm among this class of seed buyers, and the dollars they intended to spend for garden supplies will be used for the summer vacations.

eral, the season has not been satisfactory from the country dealer's standpoint and he is averse to placing an order for future supplies until the present surplus is disposed of.

THE bulb business is not as good as it should be according to reports. Some of the jobbers fear that a drop in prices will be necessary to close out properly.

G. F. KLEIH, Dubuque, Ia., advertises as follows in the local papers: "Every true lover of sauerkraut should buy cabbage seed from me; the kinds suitable for this country."

A CAREFUL inspection of the onion fields that were sown early for sets in the Chicago district shows the seed to be sprouting fairly well and an average stand in most cases is expected. At Louisville the fields for onion sets show a good stand; the growers are starting to run the cultivators. A full acreage has been planted.

AS CLARKS SEE CONDITIONS.

Under date of May 3 Arthur B. Clark, of the Everett B. Clark Co., Milford, Conn., reports as follows on conditions in the territory in which the firm operates: "Here in Connecticut the season is something like two to three weeks backward. There have been so many backward seasons of late years, however, that possibly we should change our basis of reckoning. But, even so, this will have to be classed as a cold, backward spring. We had our April in March and our March in April. Judging from the temperature today, we may look for another February in May. So far farmers have had to work in their overcoats and at the risk of pneumonia at that.

"The onion seed acreage hereabouts is an average one and it was only yesterday that the last onions were set. Onion bulbs wintered only fairly well. Beets, carrots and parsnips, on the other hand, are coming out of the pits in prime condition, what there are of them. The quantity of these latter, however, is greatly reduced this year, particularly of carrots, of which there will be only a trifling acreage. Turnips also will be set in less quantity than usual, as growers in this section have difficulty in finding a dollar growing this seed at present prices.

"As to corn, we have strong seed with which to start out and by the time our growers and ourselves get this into the ground Mother Nature must have surely warmed up to her job. The seed will go into the ground somewhat late, but corn, with favorable conditions, which are surely due us from this on, will rapidly make up for lost time. The acreage will not be large. Growers are fighting shy of corn, like turnips for seed, and for like reasons. We shall have to ask more money for our Connecticut seed in order to be able to produce it in sufficient quantity to satisfy our trade.

"In the pea and bean sections conditions are nearly identical with those here. Our superintendent over our Wisconsin branch, when last reporting, stated that it was snowing as he wrote and that the first seeding was still two weeks off. Our Mr. Cross, in charge of our Michigan branch, states that no seedling was done in his section until the first part of May. However, this handicap will be readily overcome if favorable conditions follow. The seed grower must be optimistic. Treat us somewhat more respectfully in the matter of moisture than we were treated last season and we will yet 'make good' with a crop of peas and beans. As to acreage, up to March it looked as though we should not get all our seed out—the farmers were thoroughly discouraged. An advance in farm prices, together with other considerations, and much coaxing finally induced them to try once more, with the result that all of our desired acreage of both peas and beans is now booked.

"Our stocks along all lines are unexpectedly well cleaned up. In the small seeds we have no surplus to mention, and of corn only the customary odds and ends, which will always be on hand at the end of every season. Together, however, these do not aggregate a surplus of any consequence. Of peas, it goes without saying, and of beans as well, we are practically bare. Thus we start out the new year of production with a clean slate, good future sales and high hopes for a full crop."

grown under the same treatment, is in the order given, commencing with Christmas week. The old double Von Sion is first, closely followed by Golden Spur, Henry Irving, Princeps, Sir Watkin, Poeticus ornatus, Emperor, Empress and Barrii conspicuus. Practically no other variety is forced here by the thousand. Possibly some growers will remark upon the exclusion of Horsfieldii from this list, but this variety is quite out of favor with English growers and is seldom used, on account of its almost certain liability to the disastrous basal rot, and also on account of the soft, flimsy texture of the bloom, the petals being almost transparent and so delicate as to be damaged by the slightest rough usage. The variety Empress has almost entirely superseded Horsfieldii, being more robust in constitution and taller and stouter in growth, with blooms that have double the texture and durability.

COLORADO ONIONS TO GO WEST

It is reported from Greeley, Colo., that J. B. Agnew, of the Pacific Seed Growers' Co., and Russell Woldenberg, of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., have been there recently, the latter as lately as April 29, contracting for available fields of onions now planted in the vicinity of Greeley. Weather conditions at Greeley are said to have been fairly seasonable this year and the prospect is for a good crop of bulbs, such part of which as the Californians have secured to be shipped to the Santa Clara valley for planting for the 1908 crop.

It is well understood in the trade that one of the difficulties of the California growers early in the season was a shortage of onion bulbs on the coast for planting for the 1907 crop. Recent developments have shown that this condition, instead of being improved, will only be accentuated when planting season comes again, except for some such move as receiving supplies from other localities, like Greeley.

CANNERS' QUANTITIES.

As illustrating the importance of the canners' requirements to the seed trade, the following figures of the 1906 pack in a single state, New Jersey, are of interest:

THE CORN ROOT-APHIS.

As a means of replying to the requests received for full directions for the treatment of seed corn as a protection against injury by the corn root-aphis, the state entomologist for Illinois, Dr. S. A. Forbes, has prepared the following. The quantities mentioned are sufficient to treat the corn necessary for seeding about forty-five acres. If a larger or smaller acreage is to be planted, each can easily figure the necessary amount for himself:

Mix one pint of pure oil of lemon with one gallon of denatured alcohol or wood alcohol.

Put one bushel of seed corn into a tub, half-barrel, or similar vessel large enough to allow vigorous stirring of the corn.

Measure out one and one-half pints of the mixture of oil of lemon and alcohol.

Slowly sprinkle this mixture on the corn, at the same time stirring the latter vigorously with a stout paddle or stick. Do not let the oil collect at the bottom of the vessel for lack of stirring and thorough mixing. Stir vigorously until the oil is well distributed. It should not take five minutes to prepare a bushel of seed.

Put the corn thus prepared into a grain sack and it is ready to take to the field for planting. Keep this sack in the shade.

Do not prepare more than can be planted in a half a day, unless it is inconvenient to return to the crib at noon.

PURITY OF SEEDS.

Should seeds be strictly pure, and if not how nearly pure should they be?

The purity of seeds varies greatly with their kind. The Maine Experiment Station says it is possible to grow timothy seed so clean that it carries practically no foreign weed seeds. It is not so easy to grow any of the other grasses or clovers as clean. The director of the station says there is no need to ever buy timothy seed that is much less than 99.5 per cent pure. Samples have been examined by the station the present year which contained not a single foreign harmful seed.

The best red clover seeds will frequently carry as much as one per cent of foreign matter, although these impurities are usually comparatively harmless. In many of the low grade red clovers, which are only ninety-five per cent pure, it sometimes happens that a large part of the impurities are harmless. It is, however, poor policy for the sower to buy a red clover seed that is less than ninety-eight per cent pure. The best grades of alsike will run about once been introduced. Samples of red-top carrying as high as twelve or even fifteen per cent of timothy are not unusual. If one could be sure that the impurities were harmless, like chaff and timothy, it might be safe to buy a red-top even as low as eighty-five per cent pure. Unless one is assured of the character of the impurities, it is unwise to buy a redtop less than ninety-five per cent pure.

From the above it is evident that in the judgment of the director of the experiment station, it is wise to buy only high grade seeds that are comparatively pure. He says that not only are the high-grade seeds purer, but they are usually larger, plumper, and heavier, more of them will germinate, and they make stronger plants.

EUROPEAN NOVELTIES.

The following notes on continental novelties we take from the supplement to the Horticultural Trade Journal, an English publication:

Begonia Semperflorens La France.

This cross between B. semperflorens elegans and B. semperflorens gracilis rosea, possesses all the good points of the parents; the large blooms form corymbs of great breadth, well raised above the foliage, and so numerous as to cover the entire plant. The plant has good height, leaves shining green, and of a size commensurate with the blooms. Well adapted for large as for small beds, etc., and for pot culture and solitary plants. When taken up from the beds in the open in autumn and potted, the plant continues to flower the entire winter. The variety originated in a garden in southern Germany, and is being sent out by Daiker & Otto, nurserymen, at Langenweddingen, near Magdeburg.

Begonia Semperflorens Berna.

This pretty variety is much finer than B. semperflorens magnifica, and comes true from seed, a matter of great value to those who are not possessed of much space under glass in the winter season. It has been in commerce for two years. The flowers are brilliant red in tint, the anthers yellow, making a good effect. The growth is much branched, and the flowering extends from early summer to late autumn. The leaves have a metallic hue. It is better to avoid a rich soil for B. semperflorens if flowers are desired.

Gigantic Coleus.

Half a dozen crosses of coleus have been raised by the firm of Teupel Bros., of Quedlinburg, which are said to exceed all other large growing varieties in the extraordinary sizes of their leaves and robustness of growth. The leaves also possess fine coloring. The plants make imposing objects and bear comparison with the handsomest codæums, but they are incomparably quicker and more easy growers.

Fuchsia Emile Wildman.

Although the fuchsia has been a favorite plant with hybridists and cross-breeders for more than three-quarters of a century, novelties are annually being raised which deserve attention. Among the latest of these is Emile de Wildman, a variety put into commerce in 1905 by the raisers, Lemoine & Sons, of Nancy. This variety grows naturally in regular pyramidal form without pruning, and flowers grandly, still it is advised by a writer in Moller's Deutsche Gartener-Zeitung to nip off the flower buds till the end of the month of May. The flowers possess carmine sepals of a light tint, and a very large and full corolla of a dull tint of rose-pink. The plant has great vigor and should find much employment in conservatories on pillars and walls, and as a standard.

Heliotrope Cyclops.

One of the most valuable varieties of heliotropes is Cyclops, raised by Herrn. P. Fidler, at Strausberg, near Berlin. The habit differs from that of the older varieties, is more compact, and growth is made from below, and without being rampant, and the flower corymbs stand out well from the leaves and shoots, on stout footstalks. The plant is as avail-

PACIFIC COAST.

TACOMA, WASH.—Charles Halkier expects to begin this summer the erection of three parallel greenhouses, each 16x100 feet.

TACOMA, WASH.—E. R. Roberts, superintendent of parks, has offered the U. S. Department of Agriculture the use of five acres of land in Point Defiance park for experiments in bulb growing.

GRASS VALLEY, CAL.—William E. Johnson has a force of men at work building large greenhouses at his place on West Broad street. He expects to engage extensively in the flower and plant business.

CHICO, CAL.—A sale has been consummated whereby F. W. Power, who has held the controlling interest in the Chico Nursery Co., and M. McDonald and A. McGill, minority stockholders, have disposed of their entire interests in this company to F. X. Bouillard, E. Wightman and E. Harlan of this city, who are now sole proprietors.

VICTORIA, B. C.

Bedding season has set in and the outlook is good. Geraniums look like being in short supply.

Carnations are now fine in many of the establishments. Enchantress, of course, holds first place.

Wollaston & Wallace's bulb farm is now in its glory. One bed of Narcissus Barrii conspicuus contains 40,000 flowers. They are cutting Narcissus Emperor with stems two feet long.

The death of Mrs. M. A. Farrington is announced in the obituary column this week.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is at a low ebb and were it not for the few funerals and something in the way of school closings there would be hardly anything to write about. The threatened street car strike did not materialize, as was expected, and everyone breathes more freely in consequence, as during the trouble of last year the florists were affected disastrously.

Stock of all kinds, with the possible exception of fancy roses, is extremely plentiful and prices are away down. Carnations can be had at any figure, but the surplus will be over in a few days and better prices may prevail. There is not much yet to be had in the line of outside stock. A few sweet peas have arrived, but they show the results of the excess of moisture and from the first plantings we can not expect an extra good cut. Violets are practically over. Only a few straggling bunches are seen and there is no demand for them.

Late flowering daffodils, as well as outdoor tulips, are holding on. Valley is plentiful and cheap, although it is not in quite as abundant supply as it was two weeks ago. Peonies sell well, but they are not yet in large supply. Coreopsis, gaillardias and stocks are beginning to be peddled around the streets by the hucksters, which usually shows that flowers are getting plentiful and prices have dropped.

fairly busy, with funeral work as the principal item. Several report good orders booked for Decoration day.

Various Notes.

Clarke Bros., of Oakland, took a unique way of advertising the opening of their new Clay street store. They announced in the daily papers that every lady attending would be given a bouquet of carnations. The crush was tremendous; the public stormed the place all day long. The clerks were unable to handle the mob, but succeeded in giving away about 25,000 flowers before the day was over.

John Vallance, for many years superintendent of the plant department of the Cox Seed Co. at Glen Echo, will continue in the same position with C. C. Morse & Co., the successors of the former owners.

Much difficulty is being experienced by the growers in getting sufficient help to handle their nurseries. The tremendous demand in other lines in which labor is better paid accounts for this, so that the growers have had to rely to a great extent on Japanese.

Thomas O'Neil, for many years identified with the Myrobolan Nurseries at Hayward, has withdrawn from that firm and will plant about twenty acres of young stock at Mount Eden.

J. J. Kegley, for many years connected with the Wragg Nursery Co., of Des Moines, Ia., but at present on a visit to the Pacific coast, will take a trip up through Mendocino county and the northern part of the state in a few days.

Co., of Pasadena, was especially attractive, palms and plants being mingled with the larger shrubs in a pleasing manner. The Signal Hill Flower Co. had an exhibit of cut blossoms and greens that has attracted much attention, and the exhibit of the Oceanside Floral Co. included dahlias, carnations, sweet peas and coreopsis.

One of the most magnificent displays of the entire show was that of amaryllis from the John Lewis Childs place in South Pasadena. The Wright Floral Co. exhibit was a single basket of lavender sweet peas, with maidenhair ferns.

Near the center of the open floor space was one of the triumphs of the exhibition, a magnificent pergola from the Rising-Duncombe Co. Ferns and carnations, varied by pink and white roses and red carnations with appropriate green, massed pleasingly, formed a combination which reflected credit on the decorator.

From the estate of A. Campbell-Johnston, at Garvanza, come magnificent iris and gladioli. In the booths around the sides of the rink refreshments were served by the ladies of Christ church, and there were several entertainment booths also in charge of these ladies.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. O. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

It is reported that the Waterloo Nursery Co., Waterloo, Wis., is planning to remove its headquarters to Fall Creek, Wis.

AUGUSTINE & Co., Normal, Ill., report a fine spring business, prolonged by the continued cold weather. They have shipped Sudduth pear trees to South Africa, Australia, Japan and other countries.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has just issued a bulletin of forty-two pages devoted to a discussion of "Spraying for Apple Diseases and the Codling Moth in the Ozarks." As it is stated that Ben Davis is the predominating variety in the orchards affected, discriminating consumers of apples will doubtless think the publication of the pamphlet a sad waste of public funds, but if the bulletin does not show how to improve the flavor of the Ben Davis, it tells how the merchantable percentage of the crop may be largely increased.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

Currants and gooseberries encumber the ground if they are not kept free of worms. I know of nothing so unsightly as rows of currant and gooseberry bushes denuded of their foliage and with starved fruit sorrowfully clinging to their branches. Timely applications of powdered hellebore will keep them in good condition and render them capable of maturing good fruit. The early morning, when the foliage is moist, is the best time to apply the powder; one or even two applications may not suffice.

California privet grown into shapely specimens of medium size will pay for the little extra care and trouble required, by the price easily obtained for such stock. To grow them as suggested, the plants after the first year need room to form into the dimensions desired. An occasional clipping will bring them into shape. Many privets grown in this way are now planted singly and in groups and rows on private estates. Standard privets in many instances are answering the purposes for which bay trees were heretofore used, and it is questionable if they are not as effective as the bays. They are certainly hardier and can be produced at a much less expense.

Japanese maples, in order to keep them in good shape indefinitely, should be regularly pruned hard back. Then they will continue to develop their effective characteristics, whereas, if they are let alone to grow unhindered, in a very short while they will get unshapely and bare of foliage at the base.

Plants of Hydrangea Otaksa in tubs and left unsold should be planted out in the open ground, and, if the flowers are no consideration, it will also help to increase the value of the plants to cut them back well when planting them.

Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora is easily grown from hardwood cuttings, and considering the demand for plants of small size they should be grown in large numbers.

FOREST PLANTING LEAFLETS.

Under date of April 29 the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, issued another set of its forest planting leaflets. These will be of interest to the nurserymen, as they describe the characteristics of each species, treated under the several headings of form and size, range, habits and growth, economic uses, methods of propagation, planting, cultivation and care, etc.

Not only is the department issuing a large edition of these circulars, but copies are supplied to the daily and weekly press, with the result that the circulation runs into millions of copies.

The subjects of this series are as follows: Hardy catalpa, Catalpa speciosa; box elder, Acer negundo; white willow, Salix alba; tamarack, Larix laricina; black walnut, Juglans nigra; osage orange, Toxylon pomiferum; coffee tree, Gymnocladus dioica; green ash, Fraxinus lanceolata; yellow poplar, Liriodendron tulipifera.

FOLEY'S FAMILY FRACAS.

M. F. Foley, president of the Great Northern Nursery Co., Baraboo, Wis., was a candidate for the state senate at the last election and political capital was made of a suit started by his brother, W. E. Foley, who claimed a balance due under a contract. Election circulars said the plaintiff wanted a "square deal."

W. E. Foley had a contract with the Great Northern Nursery Co., under which he was to receive certain stock from the company at wholesale prices, and he in turn sold this stock to customers in different parts of Wisconsin, using the company's order blanks, but taking the profits between the price he paid to the company and that which he got from the customers. In the season of 1905 he took certain orders for delivering the following spring, which he claimed he turned over to the company and upon which he sued for $977. M. F. Foley claimed that the orders taken by W. E. Foley were purchased by the company and more than paid for.

The questions submitted to the jury, with answers by the jury, were:

1. Did the defendant company purchase of W. E. Foley the orders in question? Answer: Yes.

2. Did W. E. Foley have any authority to give free replace contracts with defendant's customers? Answer: No.

Both questions were decided in favor of the company, and the decision wiped out the plaintiff's cause for action entirely, and it entitles the company to go on and prove what damages have been caused by the plaintiff having given replace contracts to patrons which he had no right to do. The company claims that the replace contracts made with customers by W. E. Foley, then agent of the company, were filled because it was obliged to make good agreements of agents in order that it might retain its standing with the patrons.

Whether the Great Northern Nursery Co. will prosecute for damages is not known, but it is likely that it will not, now that its president has removed the stigma from his name of having "tried to beat his brother."

DEUTZIAS.

One of the hardiest deutzias is the species parviflora, a native of northern China. A native of China and Japan is Deutzia scabra, usually sold in nurseries as Deutzia crenata. It varies in height from six to ten feet, according to conditions, with stout, yellowish branches. The upright, spiked, white clusters come into bloom in June and last until July. There are a good many forms of this deutzia in cultivation, differing in semi-double, double and purple or rose-tinted blossoms.

Deutzia Watereri has a large, double, rose-tinted flower which is showy. Deutzia discolor, a native of China, is a graceful shrub growing three to four feet tall, with white flowers tinged with pink on the outer side of the petals. It needs protection from the cold in New England winters. Deutzia Kalmæflora is a beautiful shrub, with large, white, distinct blossoms slightly tinted with rose, but the publicity bureau of the National Council of Horticulture says it should be well protected in winter.

A large number of forms and hybrids have lately been sent out by French originators in which the parentage of Deutzia gracilis on one side has been largely used, and which are conspicuous for rose tints, large, bell-shaped blossoms and more conspicuous clusters.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE GRAPE.

It has always been the custom of intelligent and progressive people, when they find there is a quality lacking, or a shortcoming in any article, tool, animal or food, to find out what this shortcoming is, or what the defect is, or where it lacks in certain qualities that might be better, and then to see if such can not be improved, either by doing away with the poor qualities and substituting better or to improve that quality already found. Such has been the history of the grape in Texas and the south.

Need of the South.

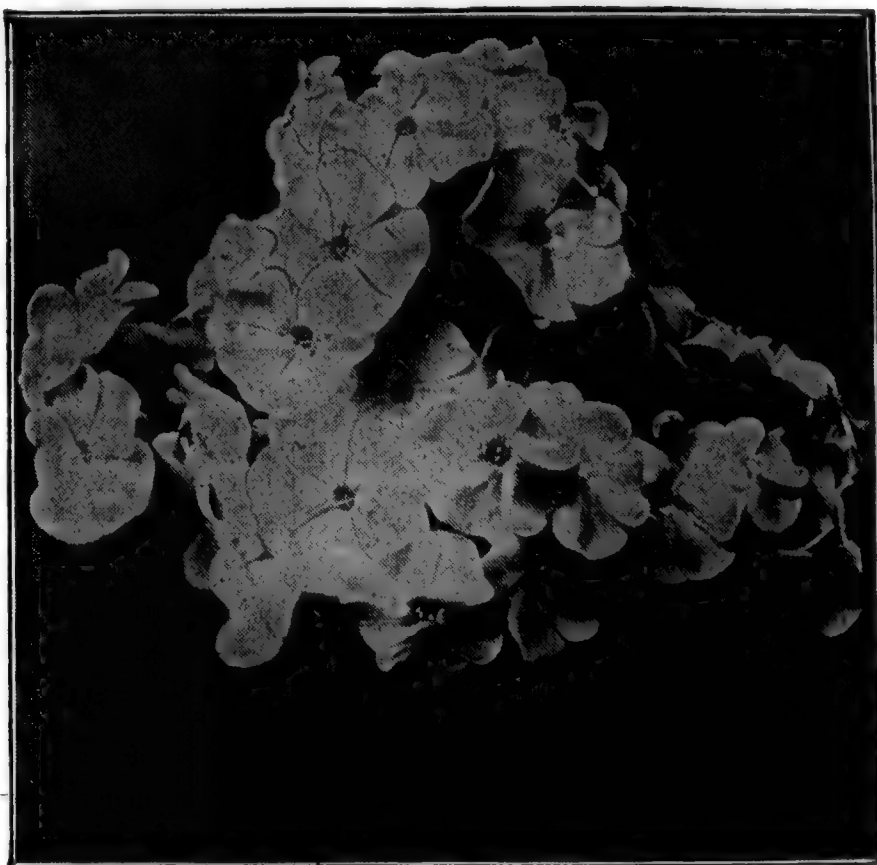

When the pioneers first came to this country they found no native cultivated varieties, but only wild kinds growing in the woods, and these wild kinds, while the vines flourished, produced no such fruit in good eating qualities or did not have the proper marketing qualities as had such cultivated varieties in the north and east. So the first improvement over the sour grapes of the woods was to get vines of the northern varieties and plant them here. But it was soon demonstrated that they would not be the ideal grape for the south, as they were generally short-lived, and the quality of the fruit was not as good as the same variety is found to possess in its northern home. The effort to plant the varieties of the vinifera or European grape also failed in that the vines and fruit possess no resistive qualities to fungus troubles; that is, mildews or rots. The reason for their doing so well in California and other places is that those places have a dry atmosphere, in which such fungus growths do not thrive. Thus it became patent that if the grape industry was to be of any good in this section of the south it was necessary to get a set of varieties that could endure the climatic conditions of severe drouth and sudden cold and at the same time to get grapes of fine eating and good marketing qualities.

Dreer's Hardy Perennial Phlox.

We are the largest growers of Perennial Phlox in the world. Our collection is unequalled, and we are prepared to furnish the new and rare kinds as well as all the popular and standard varieties in large quantities. The plants we offer are nearly all strong one-year-old field-grown plants or equally strong divisions, and will make a fine display of flowers this season. This stock is much superior to and must not be confounded with young Winter propagated stock such as is generally sent out in the Spring of the year.

Meeting the Need.

Here was a want to be supplied. How was this to be filled? By improving the old sorts, by giving them healthy vines and better quality, if possible; by improving the vigorous, long-lived native grapes by giving them a sweeter, a more agreeable flavor, a larger cluster and a persistent berry, so that it would carry to distant markets. Could not this come about by cross-breeding and combine the good qualities of both fruit and vine into a new variety? Such was the solution. But it can not be done in a day, or a generation, but must take time and patience.

We find in the woods as native growth vines of the post oak grape. Learning its life history and characteristics, we find it to be healthy, vigorous, deep-rooting and long-lived, in a climate we want such qualities. But we find its fruit is rather too astringent for pleasant eating, but also find there is quite a variation in its fruit, as some vines have much better and sweeter fruit than others, as well as a variation in size of cluster, and persistence of berry to cluster. In this way a selection is made of the vines having the fruit nearest our ideal. Such vines are taken up at the proper season, or else cuttings taken from them and propagated so that we can have vines to set in the vineyard as parent vines. In the same way we choose varieties of the other kinds, having the fine flavors, large, fine appearing clusters. After the selection of the parent vines are made, and having them planted in the same or neighboring vineyards, we are ready for the next step.

The Market.

Since my last report the market conditions have been about the same. The stores and retail markets are doing all that can be expected. The cold days and nights hampered business somewhat and, to top it off, the circus was here and the races were going on, which made the week a little dull. However, few cut flowers went to waste. Carnations are just enough to meet the demand. Roses are a little more plentiful, while violets are getting to be a premium. Bulbous stock is getting off the market fast. There is a good supply of callas and Harrisii left. Greens of all kinds are a little scarce yet.

We are still in the clutches of wintry weather and the bedding plants move slowly. As soon as the weather breaks, thousands of potted plants will be thrown upon the market and a grand rush will take place. Already some of our growers are offering plants at an extremely low figure.

Various Notes.

F. Seidlrich, of Woodlawn, has sold his place, consisting of five and one-half acres, and has bought one and one-half acres of land from Mrs. Selzie, at Catonsville. He will rebuild at once.

The weather conditions have kept one of the regulars at home, J. H. Brummel, of Catonsville, who has been well known by the trade for the last twenty-five years and who has stood on the same corner that his son, August, now occupies. No doubt, as soon as the weather permits he will again be with the regulars.

J. O. Strand reports market trade dull in the potted plant line.

After spending a day in town May 3, J. B. Harman, on reaching his home, found a large hay barrack a mass of flames and the stables and other buildings in danger. The prompt arrival of the county fire department kept the blaze under control. Mr. Harman has one of the best kept places in Catonsville.

Thomas Patterson, of Waverly, is offering his place for sale. It is improved with a fine dwelling house and stable and a range of greenhouses, and is convenient to the center of the city.

H. C. Scott & Sons, of Ellicott City, are cutting a fine lot of short-stemmed Marechal Niel out of a house 20x60 feet. These come in splendidly for funeral work and there is a steady demand for them.

William Terry, at Owings Mills, had a large wedding order for April 24, ALBANY, N. Y.

Banquet of the Florists' Club.

The first annual banquet of the Albany Florists' Club was held in the evening of April 29 in the Hotel Hampton. It was attended by thirty-four members of the trade in Albany and vicinity and proved a most enjoyable occasion. One of the features was the election of officers for the ensuing year. It resulted as follows:

President, William C. King; first vice-president, Edward F. Meany; second vice-president, Frank M. Briare; treasurer, William C. Kurth; secretary, Thomas F. Tracy; committee on by-laws and board of trustees, Patrick Hyde (chairman), Henry Barthel, Fred Henkes, Fred Goldring and Patrick K. Morrissey. The newly elected president, William C. King, was escorted into the chair of office by a committee composed of William C. Gloeckner and William C. Kurth.

Short addresses were made by Fred Henkes, the temporary president of the club, which was organized last summer, Frederick Goldring, the oldest florist in this section, and by Fred A. Danker, William C. Gloeckner, William C. Kurth, Frank M. Briare, Henry Barthel, Patrick K. Morrissey, Thomas F. Tracy, Edward Tracy and others, who made impromptu responses. John A. Howe, Jr., gave recital of his experiences as an amateur florist and in addition gave a number of humorous recitations.

Among those present were the following: Fred A. Danker, William C. King, William C. Gloeckner, William Hannell, Watervliet; Patrick Hyde, Frank M. Briare, George Russell, Henry Barthel, James Conley, John Murnane, Jr., Frank Keeler, Thomas Snare, Edward F. Meany, William C. Kurth, Louie Marx, John Nealon, John Maloy, James J. Cairns, Philadelphia; Edmund S. Hazeltine, Thomas F. Tracy, Fred Henkes, Watervliet; John Boots, Philip Warner, Newtonville; Henry Long, John Henkes, Watervliet; C. J. McDonough, Thomas McAllister, Patrick K. Morrissey, Arthur King, John Haggerty, Henry Latham and John A. Howe, Jr., and Fred Goldring.

During the summer the club proposes to give several outings and to carry out several plans for the improvement of the business.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Stock is not plentiful and carnations are even scarce and are selling for 3 cents and 4 cents. At times there are not enough to meet the demand. There has been a good demand for Beauties the last week and the quality is fair. There has been a brisk demand for pink and white roses, but the quality is below the average and a better grade could have been sold if it could have been had. Sweet peas have been in good demand. There were some fine flowers on the market, with good stems for this season of the year. A few gladioli are to be had. They are selling at 4 cents. Few callas are seen. The last tulips were cut last week. A few purple iris are in and they sell readily.

Various Notes.

We have been having peculiar weather the last few weeks. One day it is as pleasant as summer and the next day it is snowing and freezing. There has been little bedding done so far and what has been done is frozen. We are two weeks behind with our planting and when the sun comes out once more there will be a mighty rush for all.

Nelson Jarrett has started building two large greenhouses, with a fine office and potting shed. They will be heated by hot water. He never brags much about what he intends doing, but we see that he is coming rapidly to the front. He has the finest geraniums in the market. He has added the best new varieties, which are bought at first sight. He says that his strawberries are all killed by the frost and there will be no fruit of any kind.

George F. Renz, of Kansas City, Kan., has opened a store at 751 Central avenue, in that town. Mr. Renz was in this city last week, buying stock and making arrangements for regular orders for stock to furnish his store.

R. S. Brown & Son are doing an immense business this spring, in young plants. They are about sold out of coleus, having had a good demand.

Mr. Snell, of Atchison, Kan., was in the city last week, attending to some urgent business and also purchasing some plants of which he was short. He reports business as being good in his city.

Arthur Newell reports business as good considering the weather. Mr. Newell will leave in three weeks for Texas, where he and Samuel Murray own 600 acres of the best wheat land in the south. The last report from there is that the wheat is in the best of condition. The green bug that pervades Oklahoma and Kansas is not known there and therefore a large crop is expected.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Weather conditions continue the same—one fair day and three cloudy or rainy ones, with an occasional frost sandwiched in. Last Monday all were hopeful that we were going to have seasonable weather, but today it is raining, all are in the dumps, and the flower shops look like funeral houses.

There is no change in stock coming in. Carnations are still short of supply. Roses are bringing good prices. Lilies and smilax are short of supply, but beauties are in abundance. Violets are still very good, with lots of outside narcissi of all kinds.

Various Notes.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving large quantities of Gladiolus Blushing Bride, which are fine.

The Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. is cutting fine Richmond, Chatenay and Killarney.

J. B. Murdoch & Co. report a satisfactory business. They handle stock from growers as far east as Philadelphia and as far west as Indiana.

Among the people who are standing on their toes at this time is John Bader; the plant business is keeping him going overtime.

Randolph & McClements are trying to do some building, and their plant and decorative business is very active.

Blind Bros., with their two stores and market stand, are showing up well with the large quantities of blooming plants they have in every day.

Mrs. E. A. Williams has her hands full with numerous social affairs and decorations.

The Florists' Club will meet Tuesday evening, May 7. Hoo-Hoo.

LANSING, MICH.—Rheinhardt J. Peterson is in trouble over starting to build a greenhouse here and not being able to complete it. The lumber people charge misrepresentation.

COLUMBUS, O.—Articles of incorporation were filed April 29 for the Munk Floral Co. The incorporators are Hiram M. Munk, Oliver A. Munk, Edmund A. Munk, Lida Park Munk and Marietta C. Park. The capital stock is $20,000.

EVERYBODY TALKS ABOUT IT! LIKE THE BEE

A Prosperous Florist Is Never Idle.....

An Immense Stock of Bedding Plants Now Ready

The Bee is the first that takes advantage of the Great Work that Godfrey Aschmann, the never-resting florist, with the assistance of his three grown-up, wide-a-wake sons, John, Edward and Howard, and together with his faithful employees, have done since Easter. Just think! Everything nearly empty at Easter and now, now, look now, only four weeks have elapsed and such an immense stock ready to put on the market. Can it be possible? No wonder the bees enjoy their lives in Aschmann's greenhouses. Just look how they are swarming. "Oh, Aschmann's flowers taste so sweet," the bees say. "We cannot stop; we have a big field to work on; 100,000 of the choicest plants, every nook and corner full; let us harvest." Secure Bargains now and for Decoration Day.

F. E. ALLEN & CO. Intervale Park Florists
BROCKTON, MASS.

NEW ORLEANS.

In the month of May we can say in New Orleans that the best season to sell plants is over. This year has not been satisfactory, by any means. After a mild winter the gardens were full enough of plants which had survived to not require much new planting. Besides, the prices, owing to some surplus production and close competition, have been decidedly lower than usual.

F. X. Baker, who supplies several markets downtown, is selling young roses at a low figure. It is astonishing to see the growth these little cuttings received from the north make in two or three months, when planted in the right soil. They become bushes which look as though they were two or three years old.

R. Eichling is again with U. J. Virgin.

R. Lockerbie took the contract to level the neutral ground of Canal street.

Four magnificent specimens of calceolarias in 6-inch pots were exhibited by Mr. Atkins, gardener to Henry Seigle, Mamaroneck, N. Y., who was awarded a cultural certificate for the same exhibit. Mr. Atkinson was also awarded a cultural certificate for two plants of pelargoniums. Robert Allen, gardener to E. C. Benedict, Greenwich Court, was awarded a cultural certificate for a cluster of the Princess of Wales tomato, there being twenty-three large fruits on the cluster. The monthly prize for two foliage plants was awarded to D. McFarlane for Dracæna Lord Wolseley and Croton Lady Zetland.

Henry Seigle offers a silver cup for the best table of ferns and flowering plants at the fall show.

The society voted to donate $25 toward the fund for the proposed new hospital, and to make a charge of 25 cents admission to the June show, the proceeds to be turned over to the hospital fund. The society voted also to lay out and decorate the grounds around the new hospital, exclusive of the rough grading.

PAINESVILLE, OHIO

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Business for the month of April was considerably ahead of last year for the same period. Usually at this time of the year there is an abundance of stock, but on account of the continued cold weather the supply kept shortening up right along and good prices were realized on all varieties. Roses are beginning to come in more freely now, but heavy funeral work keeps them pretty well cleaned up.

Various Notes.

There have been a few changes among the retailers in the downtown district. William Zimmerman moved one block, and now occupies a large store at Fifth street and Grand avenue. Peter Kapsalis is occupying a store on Wisconsin street. He had a new front put in and the interior remodeled and now has one of the best located retail stores in the downtown district. James Chacona has also branched out and now occupies quarters in the Plankinton block. Mrs. F. Ennis has also moved into a new store on the corner of Second street and Grand avenue, where a large show window gives her plenty of space for making a large display. Mrs. Ennis expects to do a good business in her new quarters.

Considerable space was given in one of the local papers last month to outdoor gardening, and prizes are to be offered for the best arranged and most effective yard. Alex. Klockner, of the Milwaukee Florists' Club, was selected as one of the judges. INCOG.

WICHITA, KAN.

S. Kuechenmeister, who owns greenhouses west of Riverside park, reports that the hail on the evening of Saturday, April 27, destroyed over 3,000 square feet of glass for him and that it was with great difficulty he prevented his plants from being frozen Monday night. Mr. Kuechenmeister uses gas in his boilers, and by keeping the furnace going was able to prevent much damage. He was insured in the Florists' Hail Association.

The greenhouse of Charles P. Mueller, 1819 East Ninth street, was also damaged by the hail storm.

BOONVILLE, IND.—Mrs. Joe Hudspeth says the continued cold weather through April has ruined fruit prospects here, and retarded gardens and flowers. The coal man is the most popular man now. The ice man is not in it.

Greenhouse Heating.

HOT WATER IN LONG HOUSE.

Will you kindly advise me as to the size and horse-power of a horizontal boiler, for hot water, that would be required to heat an even-span house, 30x242 feet; sides of house twenty-two inches high; double boards; eleven feet to ridge? How many runs of 4-inch cast-iron pipe will be required to heat to 55 degrees in zero weather, New Jersey climate? Would one flow and one return on each side keep up a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees? What would be the proper rise of the 4-inch pipe in the 242 feet, from the boiler to the far end? How deep should I dig the boiler pit for hot water heating? I mention the 4-inch cast-iron pipe, as I have it on hand. The house is for growing lettuce. F. W. V.

It would not be advisable to attempt to heat the house with hot water after the plan indicated, as the lines of pipe would be too long for effective service. If the boiler could be placed in a pit about midway and at one side of the house, a hot water system would be satisfactory, as the pipes could then be run in both directions. Three flows and six returns will be required, or nine 4-inch pipes throughout the length of the house, exclusive of headers and connections.

A twelve horse-power boiler will be required, but a sixteen horse-power would be more economical to operate. The top of the boiler should be at least eighteen inches below the lowest part of the heating system in the house. The highest point should be above the boiler and the pipes should have a uniform grade and fall toward the lower or return part of the boiler. L. C. C.

STEAM FOR THREE HOUSES.

We are planning three connected houses, each 23x100 feet, running north and south. The side walls are to be six feet high, with twenty-four inches of glass in the outside walls, and with a shed across the north end. The boiler room will be at the northwest corner, or at the west end of the shed. We wish to heat with steam. The boiler will be on top of the ground, with a steam trap to return the condensation. We expect to use 1-inch pipe in the coils. The greenhouses are to have solid beds, with walks next to the side walls. How many runs of pipe will be needed to give the right temperature for roses and carnations? The outside temperature seldom falls to zero, though on rare occasions it drops to 10 degrees below zero. What size of flows should be used in each house? Should all the returns be placed on the side walls, or should some come back through the center of the house? How large should the main be in the potting shed where it branches for the houses? How should the return main be handled? Shall we lay it across the ends of the houses and drop each coil into it, and if so, what should be the size of the main return? W. H.

The flow header in the potting shed should be 4-inch from the boiler to where the flow to house No. 1 is taken off; the remainder of the distance the flow should be 3-inch. One 2-inch overhead flow pipe in each house will be sufficient, and this should divide into twenty 1-inch returns for each of the outside houses and eighteen for the middle house. A more satisfactory arrangement would be sixteen 1½-inch returns in each of the outside houses and twelve in the middle house.

The return header connecting the returns in the houses should be 2-inch, although 1½-inch will answer. This return header can be placed in a trench just inside the houses, at a point about two feet below the ends of the return pipes, each pipe being provided with a double elbow and connecting to the header. TWIN CITIES.The Market.

The bad weather the latter part of last week put a damper on what promised to be a good business. Snow and rain kept the buyers at home and also prevented any planting of shrubbery and trees, which had been going on quite actively. Cut flower business, with the exception of funeral work, has been quiet. Consequently considerable stock has accumulated, which has had a tendency to lower the market, and some nice stock, especially in roses, has been closed out at low prices. Carnations are holding their own. Nearly all are doing something in the nursery line. There appears to be an unusually heavy demand for ornamental stock.

A heavy increase in the quantity of bedding stock grown is noticeable, and the stock appears to be farther advanced and will undoubtedly be in better condition when needed. Already numerous orders for plants have been booked. The city appropriation in St. Paul for the decoration of graves on Decoration day has been cut to a very small figure, which means that the citizens individually will be compelled to spend more.

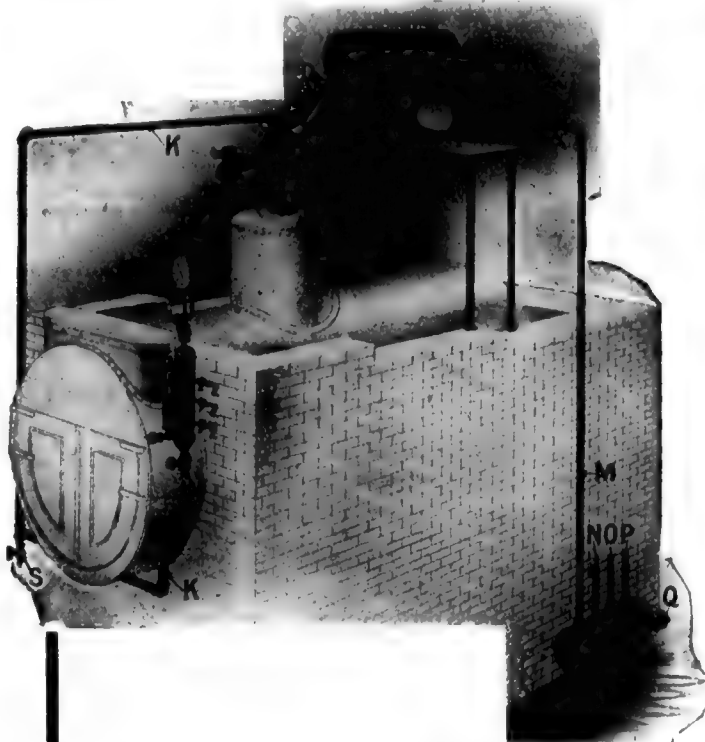

St. Paul.

Holm & Olson report a good cut flower business and a heavy demand for ornamental trees and shrubs.

L. L. May & Co. report funeral work good. The retail seed business is on in full blast, which keeps their retail department crowded almost every day. They have made some heavy shipments of nursery stock, the largest single order amounting to $3,000. Mr. May has purchased a new Packard automobile and with it can go to the Mayfield Nurseries in fifty minutes.

A. W. Lemke, successor to Colberg & Lemke, reports business quite satisfactory. Miss Benson, formerly employed by him, is now with Holm & Olson.

E. F. Lemke continues to keep up an attractive display of flowering plants; the sale has been slow on them as yet.

WE SAY

STOP putting your boilers in a pit, for with a Morehead Steam Trap it is not necessary, as it will return the water to the boilers whether located above or below coils.

LOOK and you can see the Morehead operate, as all the moving parts are on the outside—no interior floats or buckets to collapse or stick.

LISTEN and you can hear it tilt—proof positive of its perfect operation. Let us send a trap on 30 days' trial—our trap will keep the heating pipes free from condensation, and will help you grow better flowers.

WESTERLY, R. I.—The newspapers throughout the east have made a large story of an explosion which did some damage, April 26, at the greenhouses of S. J. Reuter. It was laid to an "infernal machine," though no one can explain why or how such a thing should be in the vicinity.

DETROIT.The Market.

The unseasonable weather is being felt in all lines of business, the florists' not excepted. There was a decided lull in business last week. Roses are about equal to the demand. Carnations are arriving in fairly large shipments, the quality is good and the price ranges from 2 cents to 3 cents. Sweet peas are arriving in large quantities, but hardly enough to equal the demand. They bring from 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred. Ferns are of a better grade and in larger supply than for some time. The supply of sphagnum has about given out in Detroit, bringing the price per bale up to $2.

Various Notes.

The Detroit Cut Flower Supply House is handling some fine sweet peas.

On the night of May 2 about 200 ice wagon drivers went on a strike for a raise in wages from $17.50 per week to $19.50. The dealers offered them a raise of $1 per week during the summer months. This they refused, also refusing to arbitrate the question. Friday the dealers called for a general lockout of about 500 drivers. No ice is being delivered, but consumers sending to the ice-houses for ice have not been molested by the strikers. An early adjustment of the trouble is expected.

Norman Sullivan went to Toledo May 3 with the Knights of Columbus bowling team.

FREMONT, NEB.

On the morning of May 3 an inch of snow fell here and the mercury stood at 5 degrees below freezing point. It is believed that such a temperature must have damaged any fruit which had hitherto escaped unharmed.

Our carnation stock was planted at the usual time, about April 20, and every plant in the field is killed nearly to the ground. And they were from 3-inch pots and well hardened in a coldframe before planting out. They seem to be breaking nicely from the base of the stems, however, and we think that they will all come along. Peonies are away behind and will hardly make it by Decoration day. Pansy planting by our customers, which should be well under way, has not begun. The small fruit crop in this locality is practically all ruined. Business has been good and is now ahead of last season. When the weather reforms we expect to have all that we can possibly handle, as people are getting impatient to plant their flower beds and we have a grand stock of bedding stuff ready for them.

We expect to begin the building of a house for general stock June 1. The house will be 18x120, of Moninger material. We have just installed a gasoline engine for running a rotary pump, with a capacity of a thousand gallons an hour, which, combined with the elevated tank pressure, enables us to run three lines of hose at the same time, if needed.

Garden truck is as good as could be expected, weather considered. We devote 200 sashes and seventeen acres of land to this and find it profitable. We ship hundreds of bushels of tomatoes to the north and west during the summer.

PORTLAND, ME.

At a largely attended meeting of local florists, April 29, at Mrs. Lizzie Dennett's, a permanent organization was perfected for social purposes. The following officers were chosen: President, L. C. Goddard; vice-president, Mrs. Lizzie Dennett; secretary, John J. Boyle; treasurer, J. W. Minott; committee on by-laws, Miss Marion E. McGunigle, Mrs. Lizzie Dennett, A. W. Dyer and Alexander Skillins; committee on membership, J. H. Vickery and G. W. Billings.

Reliable Insecticides and Appliances.

In connection with our varied departments of Florists' Supplies and Greenhouse Requisites, we have 200,000 square feet of glass of modern construction devoted to Cut Flowers and Plants.

As Growers and Jobbers we are large consumers and dealers of "Reliable Insecticides." The great number of advertised insecticides has prompted us to thoroughly test the benefits derived in their application. We have the remedies that will remedy. While we are not offering "Better Remedies manufactured by us," we are positive that we can supply the necessary articles that will do the work.

10 Fumigating plates	.50

send the powder by freight, the Aphicide by express prepaid. I enclose check for $9.00. Three or four years ago I had a bag of the Black stuff fine and it was without exception the best tobacco powder I have ever had. Since then I got some stuff from a seedhouse. I paid more for the article and got left on it. It was worse like sawdust than anything else. Now I am coming back to you.

Yours truly

C. E. Stevens.

Say, Stevens, we would sure like to know from you and others like you "why you stray away" to folks who don't know tobacco powder from sawdust. We have been telling you and others in a hundred different ways how smart we are in the way of tobacco powder; that we have been in the tobacco powder business for twenty years, and why our tobacco powder should be and is, twenty years AHEAD OF ALL OTHERS. Again we ask, why you let the fellows that don't know, skin you, who should know, that the BLACK STUFF FINE TOBACCO POWDER, for dusting, at 2c. per pound, in our bag holding 100 pounds, with our name, address and brand on each bag, sold only by us, direct to you, is the only one. WE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW.

The portable house and greenhouse stock of the bankrupt Charles H. Manley Company of this city was sold at auction, April 30, to George H. Chapman of this city for $2,620. Mr. Chapman started the business soon after Mr. Manley was declared a bankrupt. A stock company has been organized for the purpose of erecting a suitable building for Mr. Chapman, to be placed on the land bought from the St. John Table Company of Cadillac, and will have a side track from the Grand Trunk railroad. Work was begun on the building April 29 and is to be completed as soon as possible.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting and floral display of the New Jersey Floricultural Society took place May 3, with John White, Jr., of Elizabeth, as essayist and "Landscape Gardening" for the topic. Among the exhibitors of orchids were the following: Julius Roehrs Co., of Rutherford, Cattleya Mossiae, C. Martinelli, C. Mendellii and Laelia purpurata; Joseph A. Manda, of West Orange, Cypripedium Morganiae, a hybrid of C. Stonei x C. superbiens, and Cattleya William Murray, a hybrid of C. Lawrenceana x C. Mendellii, a fine flower never before exhibited in this country, and awarded a first-class certificate. Besides the usual array from private estates, there were also a number of plates of cut pansy blooms from John White, of Elizabeth, of his own strains; those of purple and white, with radiating penciled lines from the eye, attracted particular attention. PEONY-FLOWERED DAHLIAS.

Although the peony-flowered dahlias, which originated in Germany a few years since, are not regarded with much favor by a considerable number of dahlia fanciers, they are, by reason of their distinct character and effectiveness, steadily becoming popular with owners of gardens who base their estimate of these flowers upon their decorative value. The varieties at present in commerce are somewhat too robust in growth for gardens of limited dimensions, and the flowers of some lack the refinement characteristic of the show and fancy varieties. Yet their distinctness, and their attractiveness when grown under conditions favorable to bloom production, fully justify their receiving consideration, with a view to their being subjected to a full trial in the course of the forthcoming summer.

Hobbies Limited, of Dereham, England, have grown them somewhat largely from the time of their introduction into that country, and, as the result of their experience, they regard them as possessing considerable merit for garden decoration. They have not only grown them in their nurseries for the purpose of enabling visitors to become acquainted with them, but last year they exhibited them somewhat extensively, and contributed a large collection of cut blooms to several of the meetings of the Royal Horticultural Society held towards the close of the summer. These collections were effectively arranged and attracted much attention, more especially from visitors who care but little for florists' ideals. Messrs. Hobbies have not only grown the peony-flowered dahlias, but they have turned their attention to their further development, and have raised some promising varieties. One of these, Nicholas II, has large, pure white blooms, with broad florets, which are more regularly arranged than are those of the flowers of the varieties introduced from Germany. The variety is very free in blooming and the horticultural press in England says it is of much interest as indicating the possibilities of this new type.

Probably All Greenhouses Are Some Good

but is "some good" good enough for you? That's the point. If you are an experimentalist, a man who tries this thing today, and another thing tomorrow, then any old construction will do; but if you are in earnest and have your eyes open for the thing that saves you time, money and no end of annoyance—then you will be satisfied with nothing but one of our Iron Frame Houses. You'll have a house that's as good as a fifty years' insurance against repairs, and that will grow more plants and of better quality. That's why we say write—and write today.

the merits of our line. A trial is the best and most certain method of knowing the good things that we are giving the florists at reasonable profits and prices. First an estimate—then a trial and then you will become a permanent customer by reason of the good service we give you.

IF WHAT WE CLAIM IS TRUE, YOU ARE LOSING MONEY

every time you put off ordering our material for your greenhouses. You are losing on the quantity of your crops and on the quality of your stock. One of our houses will put dollars in your pocketbook that would have been somewhere else—that would have been spent on repairs and patching. We believe in furnishing material that gives satisfaction—that's why our business gets larger every year and the same men keep coming back for the next house. Whether you build one house or a hundred, it will pay you to use our material and our construction.

Our instruction booklet will save you money, also, when you come to putting up your house—send ten cents for one today.

A MONEY-MAKING PROPOSITION

That's how the inside of a house looks when our galvanized eave plate and sashbar clasps are used.

There isn't one of you but agrees that our galvanized ice clearing eave plate and sashbar clasp combination is one of the most practical moves ever made toward increasing the life and strength of greenhouse construction. You know, to your sorrow, that the wooden plate is a short-lived affair—that the method of fastening the bars to the wooden plate by toeing of the nails, lacks rigidity, besides making a joint that's bound to rot out in a short time, in spite of white lead, paint or whatever you may do. Our ice clearing eave plate is sold (with or without cypress facia) with sashbar clasps attached for any space of glass. It's galvanized in our own plant and drilled and fitted ready to fasten up. It may cost more than the wooden plate, but you save in erecting time—are sure of accurate spacing of bars—know your house will be tremendously strengthened—that the eave line will be the last, instead of the first thing to go. Send for prices. Find out what it costs to keep repair costs down.

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

THE SAD HOUR.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph of a rather large design made by A. Londenbergh & Son, Valparaiso, Ind. The flowers used are Maids, Brides, sweet peas, a few lilies and some smilax and asparagus. To realize the full significance of the piece it is necessary to see the lettering at the base, which does not show satisfactorily in the illustration. Inscribed there are the words, "The sad hour."

MEMORIAL DAY ADVERTISING.

There is certainly a large volume of business done on and for May 30, but I believe it can be further increased, especially by the florists in the medium-sized and smaller cities and towns.

In the first place, I noticed there were quite a few flowers sent in from people residing at a distance but having relatives buried in our cemetery, and the thought occurred to me, Why not reach out for some of this trade? I was almost certain that if those people were informed in time that good, fresh flowers could be had of the local florist they would perhaps send their money and orders to him, or to some of their friends and have the flowers purchased here, instead of sending them a long distance and having them in poor condition upon their arrival. You will find persons living at a distance who would be glad to have flowers placed on their loved ones' graves if they only knew of some way it could be accomplished, not having any one near whom they would like to ask to do it.

Accordingly, I had the following circular printed—and let me say here: Get your printer to get it up in the best of style and print it on first quality paper:

We will be in position to fill orders for flowers, especially carnations and roses, perhaps a few lilies; also designs of all kinds, intrusted to us for May 30, provided we receive the order at least one week in advance. If received much later than that, we cannot guarantee to fill them, but will do the best we can.

We would especially call the attention of those living out of town, and respectfully solicit your orders; will guarantee to fill them for you and have the flowers placed on any lot in Oakdale cemetery you may wish, just the same as if you were here in person.

I will see to it personally that your wishes are fulfilled, or should you have relatives or particular friends whom you would wish to take the flowers to the cemetery for you, you can have them call for them on the way down, and instruct us whom we shall deliver to.

Correspondence solicited. Write for prices. Please remember, prices on flowers vary according to the supply, but we will give you full value for all money sent us.

The first circulars printed did not give prices, but later ones have always had prices printed on them and I believe it much the better way.

These circulars were sent out ten days to two weeks beforehand, to the names gathered up. Some of the names I got from friends, and I found it advisable to get on the good side of the secretary of the cemetery association, from whom you can obtain all the names of non-resident lot owners. Send the circular to everyone in your own town and in the surrounding country.

People forget; put them in mind ten days or two weeks beforehand that they will need flowers. In this way you will get a lot of advance orders, which will be a great help in knowing about what you will need. The first year your circulars may not seem to have done much,

BUSINESS IDEAS.

The thoughtful retail florist will find an infinite variety of ways in which he can suggest to his customers the use of flowers in a way that will be profitable to the seller. Here are a few of the things which may be suggested to flower buyers and the public and which will widen the use of flowers:

Nativity baskets; a high-handled basket filled with flowers for the mother, a small basket suspended from the handle of the larger one, filled with flowers for the child.

The use of flowers instead of crape upon the door of a house of bereavement. This usually is a flat bunch made on a pair of cycas leaves, with white or light flowers, the stems tied with broad white ribbon.

but you will find after the second year a large increase—at least I did.

people to their friends, especially the ladies, upon their anniversaries. This fashion is capable of greater development than almost any other, for we have 80,000,000 people who have a birthday every year.

The use of palms and ferns at funerals is rapidly increasing. It is usually the duty of the undertaker to provide these, and the leading undertakers in the cities no longer think it possible to do satisfactory work without using a load or more of palms and ferns. Where this fashion has not been started, many ways will suggest themselves for putting it in practice. The florist could well afford to donate the use of some plants to families that have been good customers and in this way get other people to call upon him for similar services.

The delivery of flowers on telegraph orders is capable of great development. Print a neat card reading something like this: "We have correspondents everywhere and can deliver flowers in any city at a few hours' notice." Put this in every package you deliver to customers, but of course you cannot put it in those sent to others than the buyers. As time passes the use of these cards will establish a steady and profitable business.

NEW FERN DISHES.

There is a growing realization among retail florists that a stock of considerable variety in the way of fern dishes, etc., adds to the volume of trade. The old-fashioned fern dish, which comes back time after time to be refilled, is so well known and has been in use so many years that florists find it a profitable side line to carry a considerable stock of pottery of many kinds.

While there is a great variety possible in the selection of a stock of these aids to the sale of plants, two of the best sellers are illustrated in this issue. The brass receptacles are usually more expensive than is pottery, but they are having a good run wherever they are shown. They may be filled with almost any material, due care being exercised that the plant is not so large as to be out of proportion to the size of the receptacle. In the accompanying illustrations the same receptacle is shown filled in one case with small plants of Asparagus plumosus and in the other with primulas. They have recently been filled with violet plants, making an attractive combination. The brazen ware comes in dozens of shapes and sizes, and may be had in large pieces if one has a trade that makes them useful.

Possibly the best selling single item in the line of small earthenware is the unglazed green jar shown in the other illustration. This is made in many sizes and the color is such that it combines attractively with anything in the way of small ferns, etc. Larger sizes are used for planting boxwood or evergreens, but they do not go well with flowering plants. The shape shown is the one which sells most largely, but several manufacturers now that many people are quick to buy something different for the same purpose. All the leading florists' supply houses offer a considerable range of selection in these articles and many of the pottery manufacturers are now canvassing the florists' trade, so large has the sale for these articles become. Indeed, many retail florists are making them in a great variety of styles, including the bowls, vases and even pitchers, etc. Every retail florist who has not tried this class of ware should lay in a small stock. There not only will be a profit in selling it, but it will help the sale of plants to a surprising extent.

THE NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW.

[A paper by S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia, read before the New York Florists' Club, May 13, 1907.]

It was very kind of your Florists' Club, represented by the chairman of its essay committee, Mr. Wallace, to invite me to address you on a subject that, it seems to me, is of absorbing interest, not only to the members of our craft, who have the welfare of horticulture at heart, but to every amateur, to every private gardener, to every man and woman throughout the land, whose love for the beautiful and the ornamental in nature can neither be gainsaid nor ignored.

The proposed national or international flower show, to be held at Chicago during the month of November, 1908, will unquestionably prove an epoch-making event in the history of horticulture.

And right here the thought occurs to me, that, unless we put forth our best efforts and our utmost energies, bearing in mind that upon the success or failure of this first attempt hinges the future of an industry involving millions of dollars; unless we stand shoulder to shoulder and work for the common good of all, each according to his means and might; unless we do this, I say, we shall have no right to enter the ranks of progressive business men.

It was nearly two years ago, at Washington, that E. G. Hill, "the sage" of Richmond, Ind., first broached the subject of a national flower show. His observations on the European continent, where such shows are held annually under the auspices of royal and national horticultural societies—as in England and France, for example—led him to believe that an enterprise of this sort, undertaken by the Society of American Florists and given under the auspices of the American sovereigns—the people—could not help but prove a success.

And how, I will ask in passing, could it prove otherwise?

Objections Answered.

As a matter of course, opinions pro and con were freely expressed on all sides. There were those who predicted inevitable failure, basing their predictions upon no other reasons than such as presented themselves to their distorted, pessimistic imaginations. "Why, indeed, should a national flower show be thought of at all? Why? Haven't we plenty of local shows of all kinds," they reasoned, "that never pay?"

"And who would benefit by this national show, anyway? Men who have something to sell, of course. It is all nonsense," they concluded, "and there is nothing to it."

There were others, however, who took a broader, a much broader view of the situation, whose mental vision was in no wise circumscribed by petty jealousies or selfish motives of one sort or another, who could see at a glance the great possibilities for the advancement of horticulture, who could realize the inestimable opportunities and advantages that would accrue to our interests, who, in brief, took a retrospective view of horticulture, comparing the present with the past and drawing their conclusions as to the future. Kindled by an enthusiasm well worthy of the cause, there was soon formed a small circle of men, who were, so to speak, carried away by the idea, and a subscription list for the necessary premium guarantee fund was started.

Brass Receptacles That Take the Place of the Every-day Sort of Ferneries.

Something like $4,000 was subscribed there and then. Thus the idea of a national flower show—the first show of the kind ever attempted upon the American continent—bids fair to become a successful reality.

I shall not attempt to portray to you the grandeur of the show itself or the magnificent hall—the Coliseum—where it is to be held. Such is not the object of this brief paper; nor, indeed, am I equipped to go into any details of the sort.

That American enterprise, inspired by the go-ahead spirit characteristic of our people, will triumph despite all obstacles and despite all predictions to the contrary, is a foregone conclusion with many.

Educational Purpose.

The national flower show, it may be depended upon, will not only come to pass, but, like any other great work ever attempted by public-spirited men for the benefit of a people at large, it is destined to fulfill a mission; it aims to educate our people, to enthuse them, to inspire them with a desire for all that is beautiful in nature, to show them by means of an object lesson how things can be done, how the humble garden and the humble cottage of the workingman can be made as attractive in their way as the magnificent grounds surrounding the stately mansion of the millionaire. What the progressive and enterprising florist has attempted and has carried out in a small way in his own town, what public-spirited individuals have accomplished by way of spreading the idea of horticulture in their own communities, the national flower show aims to do on a large scale. We are all familiar, more or less, with the history of the National Cash Register Co.'s institution at Dayton, Ohio. We know that Mr. Patterson, the head of that model institution, has worked long and hard to transform a wilderness into a garden spot. We have been told how rowdyism, that took pleasure in wanton destruction of flower beds and lawns, was converted in the end to the gospel of ornamental horticulture, how unsightly cottages in the immediate vicinity of that institution were transformed into beautiful little palaces, how tin cans and rubbish heaps of all sorts disappeared, flower beds and shrubbery taking their place. To the moralist, such a transformation bears another lesson, for who will question the benign and wholesome influence of beautiful surroundings upon the mind and character of the child, the youth—our future law-maker or law-breaker?

He was a wise man indeed, who said, "Tell me your company and I will tell you who you are." To paraphrase this saying, we may put it thus: "Show me your surroundings and I will define your character and social standing in your community."

After all we are but creatures of circumstances. To the one who rises from amid squalid and filthy surroundings and forces his way through into a world of light, there are hundreds who succumb to the darkness and wretchedness of the nether regions.

If I remember right, it was the late Benjamin Harrison, who, in a speech at one of the Indianapolis chrysanthemum shows, remarked that "the man who loves flowers was never known to abuse his wife," or something to that effect.

Commercial Results.

But, to return to the subject, stripped of its moral element. Viewed in the light of pure utilitarianism or commercialism, a national flower show, such as it is intended to hold at Chicago, must as a matter of course bear good fruit.

We need but recall the early struggles of the florists of a generation or two ago, men still living in our midst—their trials and tribulations long before a society of American florists and ornamental horticulturists sprang up, long before a carnation society made its appearance or a local flower show of any sort was ever thought of, to arrive at the conclusion that the progress we have achieved was due in a large measure, not so much to individual endeavor or to individual enterprise, as to a combination of efforts, having for its aim the benefit of each, individually, and of all as a body.

Whatever arguments one may advance in favor of that hackneyed injunction, "Attend to your own business," etc.; whatever success one may point to as the result of strict attention to one's own affairs, it is a fact beyond dispute that the Society of American Florists is responsible for most of our achievements in the past and, if I may venture a prophecy, for much more that we are sure to accomplish in the future. I will go further and say that the Society of American Florists, as a body composed of earnest, energetic, progressive and intelligent men, is directly responsible for the success of the very man who "can't see what good it will do him to join such a society."

What Good?

"What good?" Let the history of our society speak for itself. Twenty-five years of energetic work along progressive lines has brought about the results, which we see in the greenhouse, at the store, on the highways and byways throughout the land. Our improved products, the evolution of the button sized carnation, the measly rose and chrysanthemum into perfect specimens of their kind, our improved facilities for marketing our products, our business methods, etc., are all due to organized effort—to the Society of American Florists.

"What good?" I need but cite the recent victory scored by our society before the Interstate Commerce Commission—a victory that will compel the United States Express Co. to submit to reasonable rates and, incidentally, will save dollars to the man who "can't see any good in our society."

Verily, "in union there is strength." We all know by experience what it means to give a local flower show; we know how these flower shows, whether financial successes or financial failures, have induced the growers to vie with each other in their efforts to show their best products; how these, in turn, have induced the dealers to handle the best at prices remunerative to both the growers and themselves; how, furthermore, the flower buying public has learned to this tremendous advance along progressive lines within but a comparatively short space of time? The answer is easily given. The local flower show, often held under adverse and discouraging conditions, has brought about this result; it has educated the public; it has brought the grower and the dealer together; it has induced the private gardener and the amateur to advance to the front and to improve upon past achievements.

Thanks to these shows, we have ceased to dwell within our own shells, to grope in the dark, as it were, each for himself. We have learned by actual experience the lesson of combination, or "community of interests," if I may borrow the expression that has originated somewhere on Wall street.

Local and National Shows Compared.

What has been accomplished, I repeat, by the progressive florist in a small way, in his own town; what the public-spirited individuals have brought about in their own communities; what the florists' clubs have achieved by means of giving occasional flower shows, the promoters of the national flower show aim abroad, for the inspection of "society folks," but also to inaugurate a campaign of education for the benefit of our people as a whole; to demonstrate, if such a thing be possible, through the public press and by means of circular letters, pamphlets, etc., to the great mass of horny-handed Americans the beauties and wholesome influences of shrubs, flower beds, lawns and trees; in a word, to promote horticulture in all its branches among all the people.

The Future of Horticulture.

How often do we hear the remarks, that "horticulture in this country is still in its infancy," that the possibilities for its development are practically unlimited, that much as we have advanced during the past decade or two, the future development of horticulture bids fair to surpass our most sanguine expectations! If this be true, as it unquestionably is, is it not high time that we make some effort to hasten the approach of its development? Is it not within our own power to devise some means and ways in order to bring about the results desired more speedily and within our own time? Why wait until Mrs. Jones' infant daughter, playing upon a rubbish heap in that back yard, may some day, when she grows into womanhood and has a home of her own, prefer a canna bed to a bed of tin cans? Why not show to Mrs. Jones herself the striking contrast between the two—the beauty of the one and the unsightly, ugly features of the other? Is it not within the range of possibility that Mrs. Jones may turn the scales in favor of the flower bed? Aside from the fact that the national flower show is sure to bring dollars and cents into the pockets of the very men who have neither the time nor the patience for "such innovations," aside from the fact that a show of this kind is sure to benefit our people at large—for no industry, be it the cultivation of sugar beets or shrubbery, was ever known to prove otherwise but beneficial to a community—aside from these obvious facts, we must not overlook the educational, esthetic and moral features of such a flower show, a benefit that can neither be overestimated, nor can it be estimated by the usual standard of dollars and cents.

After all, the future of horticulture, like the future strength and stability of our beloved republic, depends, not so much upon the favored few, able to gratify their whims and desires, as upon the great mass of the American people.

The future of horticulture hinges not upon what is being or will be done at Newport, along the Hudson or at Lenox, but upon the general improvement in the conditions, environments and educational standards of our people throughout the great American continent.

Just as soon as the miner in the Pennsylvania coal regions, or the laborer in the overcrowded tenements in our cities, or the farmer in the Dakotas will deem it a necessity to relieve the squalor and the painful monotony of their daily surroundings by the introduction of a potted plant, a flower or a shrub into their homes—just as soon as this comes to pass, as come it will, the future of horticulture will be laid on a solid and most enduring foundation.

The Need of Concerted Action.

discriminate, to draw the line between a high grade flower and the semblance of one, not marketable at any price. The demand at all times, as we all know, is for high grade stock. To the man or woman, to whom all flowers looked alike but a few years ago, nothing but the best appeals today. Whence this change, to accomplish for every florist, nurseryman, gardener and amateur, of every city, town and village, in every state in the Union.

It is the aim and object of the national flower show to be held at Chicago, not only to bring forth the best there is in cultivation, both here and organization, on the need of concerted action in behalf of a common cause. That Chicago will have the honor, as well as the Herculean task, to hold this first national flower show, does not necessarily mean, as some perhaps are prone to think, that this is to be a Chicago affair. Not by any means. While Chicago undertakes the work—and a tremendous work it is—it will depend on the aid and co-operation of the eastern cities and the eastern growers. This is certain. It is likewise certain that in order to make a success of this, our first attempt, there must be no division of forces, no division of interests, no geographical lines drawn. Boston as well as Milwaukee must come to the front and help share the burden of Chicago. "Let us ever remember," said the late President McKinley, "that our interest is in concord, not in conflict."

Let us remember this, if we wish to see horticulture upon a plane equal to that of any other great industry in our country.

LILIES IN BERMUDA.

The season for the blooming of lilies was later than usual in Bermuda this year and the usual shipments to New York for Easter were omitted, possibly to the advantage of all concerned. When the plants got into flower they made a magnificent show, as can be seen in the accompanying illustration from a recent photograph of a field which contains 250,000 plants. All the Bermuda growers are practicing better cultural methods than they were, having profited by the experience of those who have not at any time departed from the straight and narrow path of bulb growing. Those who have done their best are steadily improving the quality of their stock and it is now the general practice to destroy all diseased bulbs and weed out the hybrids. If this is kept up the result will be to put Harrisii back where it once was, before so many diseased and mongrel bulbs began to come out of the island. The report is that this year, as in recent ones, the crop of large bulbs will not be up to requirements, but there will be a good quantity of the medium sizes.

CIVIL SERVICE GARDENERS.

At Rochester, N. Y., the foreman of the Highland park greenhouses is under civil service. A vacancy having occurred, an examination recently was held to select a man for the job. As indicating the range of horticultural knowledge the commission thinks a capable foreman should possess the following details of the examination will be of interest:

The most important question was that requiring the candidates to write a statement of their experience, qualifying them to take charge of a park greenhouse. This counted for twenty-five per cent of the total. In addition were twenty-five questions, counting three points each, as follows:

- What are the requirements of a greenhouse foreman in a park system?
- State the different methods by which plants are propagated.
- What is meant by a species of any tree, shrub or plant?
- What methods are commonly employed for the propagation of species?
- State exceptions when more profitable and quicker methods can be used to propagate species than the sowing of seeds.
- What is meant by a variety of any tree, shrub or plant?
- How are varieties usually propagated?
- State exceptions where varieties can be raised true from seed.
- Name the different kinds of coniferous evergreens that can be profitably raised from cuttings.

State briefly the best methods of handling and growing coniferous evergreen cuttings.

What method of grafting is commonly used with coniferous evergreens?

Name some of the kinds of coniferous evergreens usually grafted.

Name the two horticultural groups of orchids and describe their habits of growth.

State the different general treatments the two sections of orchids require in cultivation.

Name six of the most important groups of garden roses.

By what methods are roses usually propagated?

What method is commonly resorted to to propagate hybrid perpetual roses from cuttings?

Name six plants that are used in what is known as subtropical bedding.

How many horticultural groups of begonias are there? Name them.

State how tuberous rooted begonias can be propagated other than by seeds.

What are the crown and terminal buds in chrysanthemums?

State which kind of chrysanthemum cuttings make the best plants.

How are the foliage plants known as hen and chickens (echeverias) propagated?

How many tulips will it take, set five inches apart, to plant a bed 15x20 feet?

How many geraniums will it take to plant a bed 20x30 feet, set ten inches apart?

Three hours were allowed in which to answer the questions. Four candidates, in this instance, felt equal to the ordeal. Two were men who had been employed in the park greenhouses for some time, and two were employees of local florists.

WANTS TO DAZZLE.

M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, forward the following unique letter received a few days ago from a well-known florist:

In the Review of March 14 you advertised that you had lost several hundred sets of Ombre ribbons. We sincerely trust that by this time you have recovered same, as we might like to reward you with an order if one of the sets were found on our desk some nice, bright, sunny morning, and we were feeling as if we wished to detach ourselves from a portion of the coin of the realm we have extracted from the purses of our customers in return for a few of our dreams in the plant or floral line.

We would further request that you favor us with your complete "katalog" of florists' supplies and, in fact, anything you may have—even to a mail order course in millinery—that might tempt us to part with some of the money which we expect the dear public to contribute in return for our knowledge of plant and floral hypnotism; that is, if you have a line that will so dazzle their optic nerves that wielded by us they cannot see our competitors.

Thanking you in advance for this request to find us, we are,

Yours truly, and then something.

WINDOW-BOXES.

In spite of the retarded spring, which has made window-box talk sound unseasonable, summer will come some time surely, and with it the ever recurring rush for the filling of tubs and window-boxes innumerable. This rush is not confined to the placing of orders for these indispensable exterior embellishments of city and country homes and public buildings, but of necessity there is associated with it also the need of more or less of a rush to fill these orders, a fact often responsible for poor and indifferent results.

The first consideration in the filling of window-boxes should be the procuring of good soil for the plants to grow in all through the summer. The next consideration is well established but not overdeveloped plants, properly selected for the purpose, location, etc., for which the boxes are wanted.

For sunny situations, flowering plants are usually asked for, and succeed well when placed there, but it is almost useless to put geraniums or other flowering plants of the like nature in boxes or tubs to be placed where the sun never strikes. In such places many kinds of foliage plants will do well and, if in addition to shade, or partial shade, there is shelter, there is nothing more effective than palms, especially kentias and phoenix, among which any or all of the different varieties of nephrolepis may be used to advantage.

Dracaena indivisa is admirably suited for window-boxes, as well as for tubs, both for its graceful habit and its ability to stand intact, when well cared for, all through the summer and autumn in bright sunshine and in partially shaded situations. Boxes look well when planted entirely with this dracaena, with the addition only of something in the nature of a vine to hang downwards; or when one or more are planted in each box, with the remaining space filled with geraniums or some other equally suitable flowering plants; or with foliage plants, such as aspidistra, which is cast-iron in its hardiness.

Ivy-leaved geraniums are charming plants for window-boxes and tubs. Salvias are bright and stand well. Acubas are hardy and well adapted for shady and exposed situations. Crotons, colored dracaenas and Rex begonias are choice subjects for warm locations on the premises of high class buyers. Cannas and hydrangeas are used extensively for bold effects when the ornamentation is undertaken on an extensive scale. Rubber plants are effective in boxes when a large number may be allowed. Lobelia gracilis may be planted along the edges.

It is questionable if for the general run of window-boxes anything in effectiveness beats the variegated vinca for a trailing vine. English ivy is also very good for the same purpose, but it is not so showy nor is it as a rule so satisfactory in the matter of growth.

Nasturtiums are well adapted for filling in the edges of window-boxes and around the edges of tubs, and especially useful when the question of expense arises in the mind of the buyer. Among the many other kinds of plants suitable for this work are marguerites, coleus, petunias, fuchsias, centaureas, tuberous and fibrous-rooted begonias, ageratum, alysum, achyranthes, Latania Borbonica, anthericum, Grevillea robusta, cupneas, araucarias and German ivy.

Bright and effective window-boxes are sometimes seen, the flowering plants of which they are composed are of mixed colors, but boxes filled with plants of one color are as a rule more pleasing and they give, besides, the impression of professional workmanship.

The boxes, as receptacles, need not by any means be costly or of superior workmanship. For all practical purposes, plain board boxes painted any desired color, green always preferable, are just as good as those costing five times as much money.

Important as the work of filling the boxes undoubtedly is, that of properly attending to the plants after the boxes are filled is of still more importance, because their remaining for any length of time a source of pleasure depends upon the care with which they are watered from the time they are filled. D. M.

PROPAGATING.

The plants intended for 6-inch pots should be propagated from now on to June 1, and many commercial growers also do not root their main crop before this date. It is harder to root plants from now on than it has been earlier in the season, because with increased sunlight, a higher temperature and drying winds the cuttings wilt so quickly. If a grower has a propagating house with a northern aspect, he can get along all right by watching his stock, but the man who has to propagate in a house where stock is growing is at great disadvantage.

The warm, dry air is every bit as bad as direct sunlight for sapping the vitality of the cuttings. If a corner can be shut off from the rest of the house by using a burlap screen, it will cut out the direct draught from the bed, and by frequent spraying the cuttings can be kept fresh till they are rooted and able to take care of themselves.

I have had good success at this time of the year by propagating in a frame behind a north wall, where the sun could never strike. In such a place, by shading the glass and keeping the sash almost closed during the day, one can root practically 100 per cent without much trouble.

The cuttings intended for the 6-inch pot plants should be watched and potted just as soon as the roots are half an inch long. If you can get some leaf soil, make the soil for the first potting nice and light by its use, putting in one-third of leaf soil to two-thirds of soil.

After potting, stand the plants in a frame outside and give them every care possible, so that they will make stocky plants. A drawn-up cutting is useless for this work if one figures on exhibiting the plants in the fall.

Other things being equal, the dwarf plant will gain the prize over a longer one. The ideal plant is not over twelve to eighteen inches from the top of the pot to the flower, so it can easily be seen that a cutting neglected has not much chance to make good.

Another important thing is the selection of dwarf varieties. I would suggest among others the following varieties:

White—Beatrice May, Merza, Nellie Pockett, May Seddon and Mrs. A. T. Miller. Pink—Lady Hopetoun, Valerie Greenham, W. Duckham, M. F. Plant and Miriam Hankey. Yellow—Cheltoni, Mrs. W. Duckham, Old Gold, A. T. Stevens and Col. Appleton. Bronze—Mrs. A. J. Miller, Mrs. G. Heaume, Mary Ann Pockett and D. McLeod. Red—Merstham Red, Merstham Crimson and Mrs. A. H. Lee. From these kinds a fine selection for twelve varieties could be obtained, and they are all large in size and of splendid habit. C. H. TOTTY.

IN A CARNATION HOUSE.

I have built a carnation house this spring, 12x24 feet, and I wish to grow a limited quantity of chrysanthemums. Should I plant them in the benches and grow single-stemmed plants, or would it be better to plant them in pots, or plant them in the open ground and lift them in September? The varieties are A. J. Balfour, Wm. Duckham, Alice Byron, Mrs. Robinson, Black Douglas, Wm.

Simpson, Uncle Sam, Good Gracious, in three colors, pink, white and yellow; Philadelphia, and Midwinter, a late variety from John Lewis Child's catalogue. My greenhouse this fall will be kept at a temperature of 54 degrees, and planted to carnations. Please explain clearly how to grow the mums I have named.

F. C. P.

Answering F. C. P., I would say that if he proposes to grow only a small number of plants, why not fill the benches with carnations and grow the mums in pots? They can then be flowered along the paths or in any corner and the returns from the house could be increased by just that much. He could, of course, plant them out in the garden and lift them early in September. Handled in this manner, they are not so liable to be neglected in the hot summer—if we are to get any this year—and will produce a good enough grade of flowers for funeral work.

The culture in such a case consists merely of pinching back the main shoots until about the first week in July and then letting the plants produce buds when they are ready in September. Water the plants and syringe them vigorously once in a while, putting in a stake or two to prevent the plants from getting broken. To grow them in pots means more work watering; otherwise it is not much different. To explain in detail how to grow mums would take up lots of time and space, but if F. C. P. will watch the notes appearing from week to week in this column and will use his own common sense in applying them to his own individual case, he will not find any very great difficulties in his path.

light soil that will drain readily, as the danger of overwatering is more difficult to avoid during the winter than the other extreme. A good rule to go by, for the beginner, is the quality of the sod that is growing on the soil. A soil that will produce a good, heavy sod will usually contain the principal elements required by carnations and other greenhouse plants. Whatever may be lacking for any particular crop can be added to it.

CARNATION AFTERGLOW.

Richard Witterstaetter, Cincinnati, the originator of Carnation Afterglow, states that he has made arrangements for its dissemination in the trade, the coming season. It will be put out jointly with William Nicholson, Framingham, Mass.; E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind.; and Dailedouze Bros., Flatbush, N. Y. The color is rosy cerise and everyone who is familiar with the variety thinks it is destined to be grown as universally as has been the Lawson. It has done excellently in the several sections in which it has been tried this season and at all the exhibitions it has scored splendidly. At the annual carnation show of the Chicago Florists' Club there was a series of five-minute talks and nearly every speaker had a good word to say for Afterglow.

DATE OF FIRST CROP.

Please tell a beginner what length of time will be required to bring rooted carnation cuttings into bloom, if planted out now, and taken into the greenhouse about August 1.

E. C. B.

Plants that are set out in the field now should make nice stock by August 1, and if housed at that date should be yielding a fair cut from early in October on. This will, of course, depend on many conditions, which may bring the crop quicker or throw it later. Varieties differ greatly, too. For instance, Mrs. Lawson would not give you long enough stems to be of much use in vase work before November or later, while Enchantress and others will give you good stems at once.

A. F. J. B.

FOR TWO HOUSES.

I have two carnation houses, each 25x50 feet. I intend growing Winsor, Fiancee, Robert Craig, Mrs. Patten, Roosevelt, Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, White Perfection, Lieutenant Peary and Dorothy Whitney. Will you kindly inform me which varieties I should grow in each house, and the temperature of the houses? Also I intend to plant right in the benches, as my stock is in 3-inch pots. When would you advise planting, and will you please inform what soil you consider best for carnations? A. N. B.

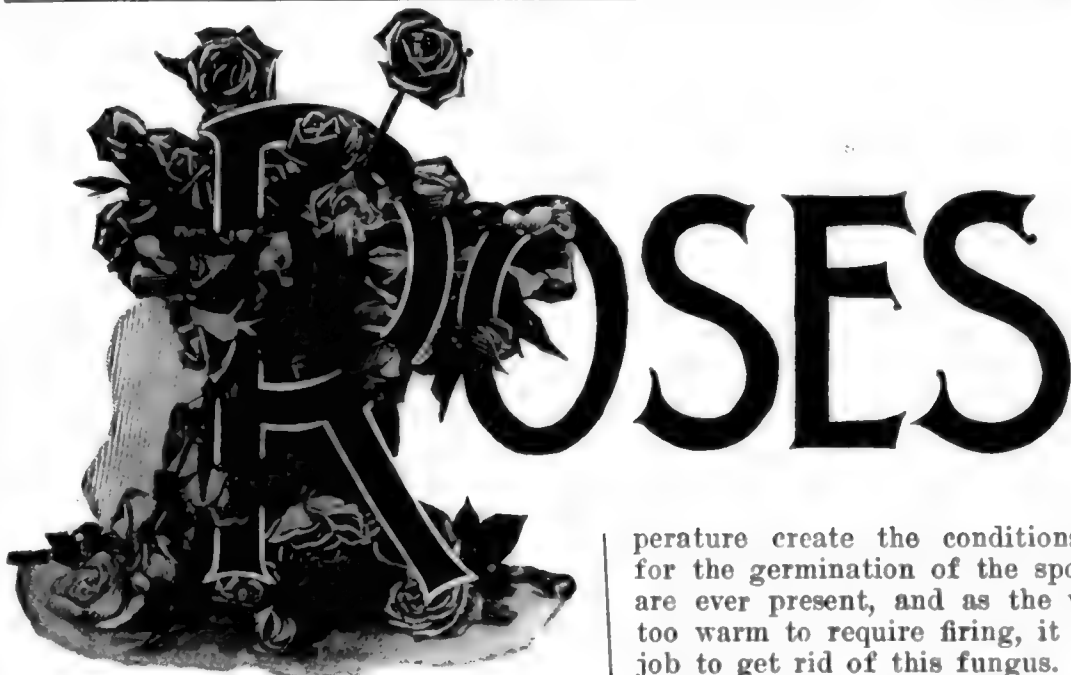

In dividing the varieties for planting in the two houses you will have to take into consideration the quantity you wish to plant of each, as well as the temperature required by each variety. If you were to grow the same quantity of each variety I could divide them half and half for you, but lest you may want to fill one house with three or four sorts and put the balance in the other house I will make three classes. One will be for the warmer house, another will be for the cooler house and the third you can plant in either house with good average results. Plant Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress and White Perfection in one house and run it at 50 to 52 degrees at night. Plant Fiancee, Lieutenant Peary and Robert Craig in the warmer house and run it at 52 to 54 degrees. Put Fiancee at the warmest end of this house. The other varieties will do splendidly in about 52 degrees.

Plant Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchantress on the north side of the house, if possible. The color will hold better if the sunlight is subdued slightly toward spring. The white varieties should be on the south side, where they will get the full sun, to prevent the blooms from coming mottled with pink. These two varieties, however, are usually free from this fault. This rule holds good with nearly all the white varieties and the various shades of pink. We have had no experience as yet with Winsor, and so do not know whether it bleaches easily or not, but I would advise planting it where it can be shaded readily without shading anything else, unless desired.

If your houses are empty I would advise planting as soon as it can be done. The young plants will be all the better established and will be better able to endure the heat during the summer than when they are planted right in the midst of the summer heat. If planting at once is impractical, then keep them growing until it can be done. Shift into 4-inch pots, if necessary, to keep them going.

Carnations are being grown successfully in a wide range of soil, and it would be a mistake for anyone to say this is the right soil, and no other can be used with as good success. The main point is to study your soil and supply whatever may be lacking to make a good soil for the plants. It will prove quite advantageous to the beginner to have a

SEASONABLE TREATMENT.

At this season mildew is one of the worst enemies of the rose grower. As the houses have to be left open a great deal and the sudden fluctuations of temperature create the conditions suitable for the germination of the spores which are ever present, and as the weather is too warm to require firing, it is no easy job to get rid of this fungus.

Careful ventilation and a dusting of the flowers of sulphur twice a week will help to keep it in check. For a bad case of it, shutting down the ventilators and running the temperature up to 95 degrees, with a good dusting of sulphur.

will usually effect a cure. This should be done while the sun is shining and the atmosphere of the house is dry. Care should be taken not to get the house too hot, or the foliage may suffer.

The most effective and easily applied of all the mildew remedies, although rather expensive, is Campbell's sulphur vaporizer. With this appliance, if ordinary care is exercised in its manipulation, mildew can most surely be kept in subjection.

Young stock now will require careful watching so that they may never be allowed to dry out, especially in stock where the pots are well filled with roots.

In stock houses, after some of the plants have been removed, it is well to keep the sand or ashes upon which they have been standing just as wet as formerly, in order to keep the atmosphere up to the proper point of humidity.

These matters may appear small and of little importance, but there is nothing in rose growing too minute to be worthy of notice and recording. The attention given these seemingly trivial matters is frequently what constitutes the difference between a success and a failure.

Every grower should keep a journal in which to note his observations and keep a record of his work, and while recording his successes he should also be careful to note his failures and, if possible, the causes. By keeping these failures and the causes vividly before his mind he will be the more apt to avoid them in future. It is by studying the causes which lead to failure that we ultimately attain success. RIBES.

BEST THREE NEW ROSES.

W. S. Nickerson, of Cambridge, Mass., who is a great rose enthusiast and a member of the American Rose Society, as well as the National Rose Society of England, offered, through the latter society, three prizes which have created an unusual amount of interest among the English growers. His prizes were as follows:

1. To the raiser of the best hybrid perpetual rose introduced since 1900, £5.
2. To the raiser of the best hybrid tea rose introduced since 1900, £5.
3. To the raiser of the best tea rose introduced since 1900, £5.

The National Rose Society selected sixty judges, men both in professional and amateur ranks, who had to decide on these prizes.

The result was that prize No. 1 was forwarded to the raiser of Frau Karl Druschki, which received fifty-four out of a total of fifty-five votes. Prize No. 2 went to the raiser of Dean Hole, and prize No. 3 to the raiser of Mme. Jules Cravereaux. Such a decision should settle for some time the relative standing of the newer roses in Europe and should be received with interest by American rosarians. W. N. C.

valuable and flower earlier than the various forms of P. decussata (paniculata). The best of this class is Miss Lingard, almost pure white, with a faint pink eye. Other good varieties are: Nettie Stuart, white shaded pink; White Swan, pure white, and Rosy Gem, clear rose. A few specially good forms of P. decussata are: Independence, Le Cygne, Albatre, Jeanne D'Arc, all pure white; Le Soleil, rose; Coquelicot, orange scarlet; General Chanzy, scarlet pink; R. P. Struthers, salmon pink; L'Esperance, lavender pink; Mme. P. Langier, geranium red; Lumineaux, rose tinted carmine; Richard Wallace, white, rose center; Eclairer, crimson; Boule de Feu, cherry red, and Le Mahdi, violet blue. There are many other good ones.

Perennial phloxes last very well as cut flowers. They should be cut early in the morning and placed for a few hours in cold water in a cool chamber before being placed in a warm room. The white and pink sorts come in useful in summer for making up design work.

The early dwarf phloxes are splendid for early spring bedding, also being at home in the alpine or rock garden. P. divaricata makes a pretty pot plant.

Incarvillea Delavayi.

Few perennials have jumped into such instantaneous popularity as Incarvillea Delavayi. The flowers, which are gloxinia-like in form, are carried in erect clusters, being large, trumpet-shaped, of rosy-pink color, and last remarkably well. Incarvillea Delavayi is not reliably hardy. In well drained locations near the sea, and on sandy soils inland, it winters with a mulching of sea weed or leaves. It is sater, however, to lift the roots in November and store them like dahlias, in dry soil, and plant out again in the spring. For mass effects, or even for individual plantings in mixed borders, this is one of the most beautiful perennials introduced for many years. Like some other plants from northern China, it is less reliably hardy than phloxes, peonies and some other perennials.

Funkias.

The funkias, or plantain lilies, are desirable hardy perennials and perfectly hardy. F. subcordata grandiflora, commonly called the giant day lily, with broad, pale-green leaves and handsome spikes of pure white, fragrant flowers, is a beautiful subject for the edges of shrubberies, preferring a little shade. We have used the flowers in design work to good advantage. F. ovata has handsome, glossy foliage and large spikes of trumpet-shaped, lilac-colored flowers. F. lancifolia, flowering in August, has deep green, lanceolate leaves and pale-lilac flowers. F. undulata media variegata, with green leaves, margined and edged with white, is fine for borders and edgings and, being thoroughly hardy, should be especially valuable commercially. All the funkias are easily increased by dividing, which can be done either in September or April.

Anemone Japonica.

The Japanese anemones are the most charming and useful of all late-blooming perennials. Their flowering period is from the end of August until cut down by frost. While perfectly hardy in many places, in well-drained land when well mulched, there are other locations where

Pyrethrums.

Pyrethrums are valuable florists' flowers, and, being of easy culture, should be more largely grown. The single forms of P. roseum give a fine variety of colors, including pure white, vivid scarlet, pale flesh, rosy pink and rosy carmine. Propagation is from seed or divisions of the plants. Seed should be sown in early spring, but it is not yet too late to secure strong plants to bloom in June, 1908. Sow in a frame which is well shaded and prick off when large enough to handle. The plants can be set out during the month of September, where it is intended to flower them. If division of the clumps is decided upon, the work is better done not later than August. This insures the plants becoming well established before winter. A light scattering of straw or leaves is all the winter protection needed.

Given an early season and a good many single pyrethrums are available for cutting at Memorial day, but during June they are especially useful. Having long, stiff stems, they are excellent for mixed bouquets and a vase of one decided color is decidedly effective. The double varieties of P. roseum are popular and succeed well in Europe, but are more uncertain here. They import badly, a large proportion being usually dead on arrival. They are propagated by division of the clumps and are fully as hardy as the single ones. The double white and pink are useful in funeral work, taking the place of asters.

Pyrethrums need well, drained ground or the clumps will rot. The well-known, tall-growing P. uliginosum is fine for massing on lawns and in shrubberies and is splendid for cutting. It blooms late, usually not before the middle of August. Flowers are pure white, with yellow centers. The plant grows four to six feet in height and is a notable object when in flower. It is propagated by division of the roots and increases rapidly in size.

Perennial Phlox.

Perhaps the most useful of all flowering herbaceous perennials is the phlox. No commercial grower can well afford to be without a row of phloxes. Their cultivation is simple and their propagation of the easiest. Soft wood cuttings root readily and may still be placed in sand and make nice little plants before fall. Treat the same as you would chrysanthemums or carnations and few will fail. During a damp, cloudy spell they can be placed directly outdoors from the propagating bed. Phloxes are easily raised from seed and the clumps may be chopped in pieces with a sharp spade. Young plants, however, give the finest heads of bloom. By making a judicious selection of varieties a continuity of bloom may be had from early June until freezing weather.

Some varieties of P. suffruticosa are it is advisable to lift the roots and store them thickly, either on a cellar floor or in a coldframe covered with earth, planting them out as soon as the ground can be worked. Propagation is extremely simple. Pieces of roots cut from one-fourth to half an inch long, laid on a sand bed and covered, will speedily start to grow and make roots. They should be potted, gradually hardened off and planted outside in April. A good time to propagate is in November or December. These young plants will not bloom quite so early as the older clumps, but will give handsome flowers toward the end of September. A few may be planted together in boxes or large pots and placed under glass when sharp frost threatens. Whether for cutting for vase work or for using in designs they are unexcelled in their season.

There are many forms of A. Japonica. The ordinary form has rosy-purple flowers. The variety alba carries pure white blooms with yellow stamens. A. Queen Charlotte has lovely, rose-colored, semi-double flowers, while A. Whirlwind bears white, semi-double flowers with a whirl of green bracts around the base of the petals. There are many other excellent named forms of these anemones. All attain a height of two to three and one-half feet. They have stems sufficiently strong to make staking unnecessary and merit extended culture by both commercial and private growers.

Astilbes.

The astilbes, or spireas, as they are more commonly known, are all of easy culture and of considerable value to florists. As pot plants we do not now propose to discuss them, as they are sufficiently known to render this needless. When planting a herbaceous border for anyone it is always well to include some of them, for in addition to making an excellent showing there, they are well adapted for cutting. The old A. Japonica has now to a considerable extent been displaced by such forms as A. compacta multiflora and the hybrids, like Gladstone, Washington and Queen of Holland. All these make splendid border plants and rapidly increase in size and value. If given rich land they will, in a couple of years after forcing, make splendid plants for potting again, although it may be necessary to chop them in several pieces before doing this.

The well-known, robust-growing variety, aruncus, or Aaron's beard, makes a noble individual plant on a lawn and is fine in shrubberies. Its long, feathery panicles are open early in July. A. palmata, with rosy-crimson flowers, makes a good border plant and is also well adapted for pot culture when not subjected to hard forcing. A. astilboides is well known as a forcer. Outdoors its beautiful, dense plumes of feathery, white flowers are borne in profusion. A. venusta and A. lobata each carry spikes four to five feet in height, of feathery, soft-rose flowers, one of the most beautiful shades imaginable. A. Filipendula, with white flowers tinged with rose, and A. Ulmaria fl. pl., the double white form of the Queen of the Meadows, are both excellent herbaceous border varieties.

All the astilbes prefer rich and moderately damp soil to give the best results. Land where no water will stand in winter, however, should be chosen. A. Davidii, one of Veitch's introductions from western China, growing five to six feet in height, has not proved hardy in some places, but is well worth a trial if only for its color, which is rather new in this genus, being a deep, rosy-pink color.

Brief Reminders.

The bedding out season promises to be a late and dragging one. There is little to be gained by planting out tender stock while the weather remains so extremely cold. Geraniums, if well hardened, should be all right to plant out and, of course, Dracaena indivisa, a popular plant for the center of vases, does not mind a little cold.

Be careful not to overwater poinsettia cuttings or they will speedily damp off. Get additional batches of cuttings in as fast as they are produced. Those rubbed off with a heel root the quickest. Give the little plants a warm house for some time yet.

Do not neglect ficus, crotons and other plants. You may be propagating by the mossing method. Be sure to always keep the moss damp and few will fail to root.

Stevia serrata must be shifted into flats or larger pots before it becomes too matted. Keep it well pinched and as cool as possible without freezing it.

Salvia splendens may still be sown for late use in borders. Successive sowings of asters and stocks can be made. Do not forget a row of Shirley poppies; these fleeting but beautiful annuals are admired by everyone.

Do not allow bedding stock to get dry at the roots, and above all things never plant out any with dry balls, or failure will result.

Give the little cyclamens more room as they grow and do not allow thrips or aphids to get a foothold among them.

Continue to put in chrysanthemum cuttings. They will still give you good, serviceable flowers.

Try to get caught up on your other work so that you can devote more of your energies to bedding out and Memorial day business, but of this more another week.

FACTORY SITE IMPROVEMENT.

It is becoming the fashion for the large manufacturing concerns to leave the big cities, with their congestion and high costs, for the roomy cleanliness of the open country, where horticulture usually finds a place in their field of operations. If a site is chosen outside a city, a new town quickly springs into being and, following the example set by the company, the people of the town take to gardening as naturally as ducklings take to water. Hence the trade has a direct interest in every such large concern, and every encouragement should be given the management in the matter of beautifying its factory site.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph showing how the work has been started at the plant of the Bradley Mfg. Co., at Bradley, Ill., near Kankakee. The planting of trees and shrubs was done by the Peterson Nursery and the bedding by the company gardener, who is charged with the care and development of the floricultural features. As time goes on not only will the whole town become imbued with the gardening spirit, to the betterment of the character of the community, but other large manufacturers will be led to follow the example set perhaps in the first instance by the cash register people at Dayton. One of the specially good features of the work begun at Bradley is that the plant stands beside the tracks of the Illinois Central railroad, and several other lines have their entrance to Chicago over the I. C. tracks from Kankakee to the city, so that millions of the traveling public will be given a demonstration of what can be done to make life worth living.

RETAIL PLANT ADVERTISING.

In spite of the fact that at this season of the year the rush is about all that any one can take care of, still nearly every grower of bedding plants who sells his stock at home does more or less advertising in the local papers; only the rush makes him slight the preparation of his advertisement, and as a consequence he loses half the value he might have had. Advertising has become a large factor in our business life and it is worth some thought; thought not only as to the selection of the methods of advertising, but as to the wording and appearance of the advertisement. It costs just as much to publish a poorly worded, meaningless advertisement as it does one that is direct, clear, convincing and attractive, and there is all the difference in the world in the results.

An advertisement always should be concise. No matter how much space you use, don't put in unnecessary words. Tell the whole story but boil it down. Don't crowd your space. Too few advertisers appreciate the effectiveness of white space in advertising. It is as good as a cut, though the latter shows the goods, and a picture is the next best thing to a sample. Quote a price; priced advertisements always bring the most direct returns, other things being equal. A price sells goods. It doesn't leave the reader in doubt. Put a well-worded priced advertisement in the paper that the people read—the one that carries the most advertising—and it will bring you business, whether your price is high or low.

The local retail advertisement reproduced herewith is one published in Baltimore newspapers by J. Bolgiano & Sons. It is one of the kind that sells goods.

GARDENIAS.

We want to grow some gardenias and would like to know what temperature they need and if plants from 2½-inch pots will bloom this winter. Will they do as well in pots or planted in the bench? Do they need smoking and will they stand watering overhead when in bloom? In fact, please tell us all you can about them. A. B. C.

A temperature of 60 to 65 degrees at night is necessary, the higher figure being better than the lower one. Plants from 2½-inch pots will make fine bushes before winter. They will need pinching several times until the middle of August to keep them bushy. They require fumigation for green aphid, which attacks the young shoots. Scale and mealy bug, especially the latter, are partial to gardenias, but can be easily kept in check by using a spray nozzle on the hose twice a week. Syringing overhead while in bloom does not harm the flowers in the least.

Plants grown along in pots will give rather earlier flowers, but these will not be of the size or quality of those produced on good benched plants. Some bottom heat is helpful and the plants do not need any shading during summer. If freely syringed, carefully syringed, the surface soil kept stirred and not allowed to become wet and slimy, the plants will make rapid growth. Close the house early in the afternoon, with plenty of moisture to start the plants along. Gradually ventilate more freely during July and August. C. W.

VINES FOR A HILLSIDE.

I have a contract with a party to cover about half an acre of hillside with any kind of vine of rapid growth. If I can get one suitable for the purpose it will have to be one that will droop, or grow downward. About twelve to sixteen feet of the lower or bottom part of the hillside is of a rocky and scaly nature, and above that there is about surface, but remembering that a considerable extent of the space in question is in the nature of rock surface and presumably continuous, I think that if Ampelopsis Veitchii were selected and planted in good soil as near the line of rocks as is consistent with an assurance of sufficient soil for the roots to feed on, when the vines get a good start they will soon go ahead over the rocks and droop gracefully, just as desired by the planter.

Then comes the matter of covering the soil surface at the top. This can be done by planting Vinea minor or Euonymus radicans, either of which would be quite appropriate. Ampelopsis quinquefolia, the Virginia creeper, could also be used for the purpose, and the other vines, or one of them, used as suggested in conjunction with A. Veitchii.

In case either of those mentioned may for some reason be found unsuitable, Akebia quinata may be given some consideration. It is a rapid grower and an altogether good thing for covering.

Again, we have the vitis or grape vines in variety, and from the list might be found one that would answer the purpose. I might go on indefinitely enumerating things that might be suitable and still come no nearer solving the problem than when I started, because presenting or suggesting so many would be liable to confuse the one most interested. In order to avoid such a contingency I would again suggest the consideration of one or both of the ampelopsis mentioned, along with Vinea minor. R. R.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

For nearly a month we have had to turn the clock backward. Even now one hardly dares proclaim the actual opening of spring. Sunday was the coldest May 12 ever and as cold as any May day in seventy years. Very few of us remember it, but the weather man can prove it by the records. Ice formed in the immediate vicinity of New York and up state, where the violets grow, and in Rochester, where the fruit trees flourish, the snow was deep and the sleighing excellent. No wonder wheat in Chicago has gone to a dollar. And yet in a day the transition to summer has been made and Monday was as balmy and bright as a day in June. The long ordeal is over, spring has come (perhaps), fruit trees are in bloom and southern birds are making melody in the parks. Eight months of snow and cold is an unusual experience for New Yorkers. One of the most serious effects of the wintry spring is the loss to market men and growers of early vegetables and fruits. Even the seeds have not yet been planted and in other years by this time lima beans from New Jersey have been in the market. Twenty thousand May-day children celebrated in overcoats and overshoes.

Nevertheless, in the cut flower market there has been little complaint and prices have held remarkably well in comparison with other years at similar dates. First-class Beauties readily have commanded 25 cents, and 6 cents has been easy for the selected Maids. Carnations, especially, are firm and well above the prices of a year ago. With the sunshine and the warmth will doubtless come the natural retrogression at this season and before four to six feet of good soil. So there is no chance of planting from the lower or bottom part; it must be done from above. I grow several kinds of vines, but none suitable for the purpose. I should like to get one that is hardy and runs about twenty feet or over. I should be pleased to hear of any vine that has the nature of growing downward, if there is such. I do not know of any. W. C. K.

Taking into consideration that rapidity of growth is of much importance in selecting a vine for the purpose stated in the query, the number of vines available by reason of their adaptability to the conditions are somewhat limited. Ampelopsis Veitchii is not commonly considered a suitable vine for covering soil the present week is over doubtless the tendency will be to lower averages in almost every department.

The cold prolonged the violet shipments far beyond the usual departure and even yet quite a daily shipment is made. Doubtless this week will see the end of them. Their quality has been far better than expected.

Another function of public interest, the Corey-Gilman wedding May 13, cleaned out the orchid and Beauty wholesalers. The decorations at the Hotel Gotham were superb and limitless. J. H. Small & Sons were fortunate in having the order. The work was unique and elaborate, there being no limit to the expenditure.

Of all other flowers there is an abundance. Peonies, lilac and every variety of spring blossom are here and the shipments, local and from the south, grow in volume daily.

For June numberless weddings are already booked. The outlook is encouraging.

Club Meeting.

The New York Florists' Club met at the Hotel Earlington, on West Twenty-seventh street, Monday evening, May 13. Over fifty members were present, President Totty in the chair. The next and last meeting of the club for the season will be held the second Monday in June, at the same place, and the attendance will doubtless be very much larger when the convenience and comfort of the place of meeting are recognized.

The suggestions of the trustees, as to changes in the by-laws, including a life membership to cost $1,000, were received and will be acted upon at the next meeting. The outing committee reported a fund of nearly $500 subscribed, as a foundation for the success of the club's annual holiday July 2. The committee on permanent home for the club reported progress and expects to have a definite proposition to present in June.

S. S. Skidelsky's essay on "The National Flower Show" was then read by that gentleman. It is given in full in this issue of the REVIEW. It created much interest and enthusiasm and a rising vote of thanks attested the appreciation of all present. The discussion which followed was participated in by a majority of those present and its fervor and interest were maintained until nearly eleven o'clock.

P. O'Mara spoke on flower shows from a practical standpoint, the gate receipts, and of their effect upon public taste, but emphasized the fact that without exhibitions development is possible and that the markets of the big cities are the main-springs of progress. He referred to the great work of the Massachusetts society and its influence on the whole land, the teachers it has sent out and the unselfishness and generosity of exhibitors. He told of New York's difficulties in the flower show line in the past, but declared New York will, nevertheless, do its share in making the Chicago show a national success.

A. Jaenecke, of Floral Park, said the failure of flower shows is due to improper consideration of the interests of the masses. A. J. Guttman referred to the need of the support of the leading metropolitan dailies, similar to the publicity given by them to the horse, automobile and other exhibitions, whereby the co-operation of society is insured and everybody thereby interested. The cause of failure, he said, is the lack of public interest, and how to create it is the burning question. W. L. Wheeler spoke in behalf of professional management and of the desirability of the club holding a show in the fall in connection with the chrysanthemum show. H. Beaulieu followed in a similar strain.

President Totty spoke of the success of the Chicago show last fall and the wonderful work of the press of that city, which contributed so greatly to its triumph. Mr. Burnett referred to the difficulty in interesting wealthy suburbanites around New York. Mr. Traendly suggested a guarantee subscription of $250 by the club in behalf of the national show, which Mr. Birnie seconded, and the vote at the next meeting to this end will doubtless be unanimous.

P. O'Mara referred to the lack of cohesion in the flower trade of New York, to the flower shows of the past, and to the need of the name of "horticultural" society to give power and tone to the organization fathering the venture in the future.

Joseph Manua discoursed on the best methods whereby the support of the millionaires could be effected. Harry Turner spoke of the English national flower shows and the encouragement given the gardeners there and was ably seconded by Mr. Weston, of Hempstead. Mr. Henshaw spoke for the retail florists and emphasized their value and the necessity of their coöperation. George M. Geraghty told of his experiences with flower shows in Denver and the methods whereby retailers were interested and their work made the leading attraction to the multitudes who attended.

S. S. Skidelsky referred to the splendid influence of the Chicago retailers in the last great success there and attributed the wonderful results largely to their faithful and enthusiastic devotion. Mr. O'Mara referred to the lack of interest shown by New York retailers and Mr. Guttman suggested plans whereby they might be converted.

Mr. Wheeler moved the appointment of a committee on closer relations with the New York Horticultural Society, which was ably seconded by W. E. Marshall.

Mr. Lenker spoke of the need of a leader to manage exhibitions and referred to the Hamburg and other European shows, where profits of $20,000 rewarded the participants.

A field day for the club at Bronx park on Saturday afternoons was suggested.

The thanks of the club were enthusiastically voted the Hotel Earlington management. Caterer Nugent and his aides were much in evidence as usual.

Various Notes.

The Fleischman Floral Co. is this week opening its new store, in the arcade of the United States Express Co. building, corner of Rector and Trinity place. It is fitted up with characteristic Fleischman originality in the height of modern style, and is sure to get its share of the good business to be done in that locality.

On Saturday, May 11, at the Bronx park museum building, Dr. M. A. Howe lectured on the "Flora and Scenery of Jamaica," and "The Recent Earthquake," the lecture being illustrated with stereopticon views. On Saturday of this week G. V. Nash will lecture on "Water Lilies and Aquatic Plants."

The Cut Flower Exchange, whose headquarters are in the Coogan building, held its adjourned meeting Saturday, May 11, and voted the distribution of $8,000 surplus among its stockholders, after holding some $7,000 in the treasury. There are issued 500 shares with a par value of $50 and the allotment will give each shareholder a bonus of one-half his original subscription.

John Kral, of the Moore, Hentz & Nash forces, is convalescing from an attack of water on the brain.

Lewis G. Reynolds, of Dayton, O., founder and president of the Carnation League of America, is at the Hotel Breslin. He announces a steady growth to the league and speaks especially of the persistent work of H. M. Altick in its behalf.

A. M. Henshaw and wife visited on Sunday, May 12, their venerable uncle, Samuel Henshaw, of New Brighton, Staten Island, who is now close to his eightieth year and under expert care for a dangerous illness, at the Smith Infirmary. Mr. Henshaw is one of the oldest and best known gardeners in this country and a great favorite with all who know him. He has no intention of giving up the fight for life and hopes are still entertained for his complete recovery. He especially asks that his fellow members of the New York Florists' Club visit him at their convenience.

M. A. Bowe, who presides "at the heart of the city," has fully recovered from a long and serious illness. Last week he had a large decoration at the Engineers' Club in the Carnegie building.

The Brooklyn florists' supply house of Hicks & Crawbuck was burglarized last week and some of the surplus abstracted from the safe. This is one of the possibilities of prosperity and demonstrates that business is good in the new departure.

William Starke and his traveling representative are both back from successful visits to the firm's customers and have disposed of a large stock of palms, evergreens and plants since Easter, shipments being made as far west as Rochester and south as far as Scranton.

ONE of the difficulties of fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas is that the cyanide of potassium is of varying strength, even when the druggist sells it for the same grade. Call his attention to the necessity of being able to depend on him to supply the same strength time after time.

Special Notice

As Memorial Day, May 30, falls on Thursday, the day the REVIEW ordinarily is mailed, and the post-office will be closed on that day, that week's edition will be printed one day earlier than usual.

Advertisers and correspondents must have "copy" in our hands not later than the first mail Tuesday morning, May 28, to be in time.

Boxwood wreaths will be a good seller for Memorial day.

If you have no printed letterheads, don't for even one day put off ordering them.

WHEN you want Pacific coast specialties, consult the Pacific coast page of the REVIEW. All the seasonable offers are always to be found there.

THE next meeting and exhibition of the American Peony Society will be held at the State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., Tuesday and Wednesday, June 18 and 19, 1907.

DON'T let weeds, or grass, grow around your greenhouses; keep a cultivated breadth, or a close-clipped lawn about them. An ill-kept place looks slovenly if you are a retailer, and if you are a grower out in the country and think looks don't count, you should remember that weeds and tall grass are a splendid breeding place for all sorts of insect pests. Keep them at a distance.

THIS is the season of gardening interest and an intimation that one has something to say on this subject will usually bring a prompt and cordial invitation to address civic improvement bodies, women's clubs and all sorts of organizations. A talk on gardening is well worth making before any interested audience, if for no other reason than that it is a form of advertising of immense value to any florist engaged in retailing the output of his greenhouses.

THE railroads have declined to give the usual fare and one-third rate to the nurserymen for their convention at Detroit in June, stating that rate legislation enacted in many states this winter is their reason. But where 2 cents a mile is the legal rate, it is the same as the fare and a third was under the old rate. On the S. A. F. meeting at Philadelphia in August no action has as yet been taken, but if stop-over privileges can be arranged the Jamestown Exposition rates will be most favorable.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Eli A. Bronson.

Eli A. Bronson, aged 81 years, died at Brooklyn, N. Y., May 4. He was for many years a resident of Geneva, N. Y., and was identified with the upbuilding of the large nursery interests there. About twelve years ago he retired from a partnership with S. W. Hopkins because of advancing age. Interment was at Geneva.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The weather has been a pronounced factor in this market for three months. It was responsible for the enormous glut in March, and the sudden change to cold in April produced a shortening of supply all through the Chicago territory, which held prices for the month of April at a higher average than has been realized in any April in recent years. There were fair supplies in the first ten days of May and the reappearance of spring produced a great inundation of cut flowers. May 13 the official thermometer registered 87 degrees and the influx of stock was ahead of the requirements of the market.

Roses came in by the thousands and were, at the first of this week, considerably in excess of what the legitimate demand would consume. The call for short stock for funeral purposes, which has been such a pronounced feature of the market conditions for the last three weeks, has subsided, and the short roses have gone back to their normal position. They can only be cleared out by means of bargain sales. With nearly all growers the average quality of crops is so good that there are fine roses to be had at cheap prices. Maid is in larger supply than Bride. Red roses are in good demand, but the price of Beauties has fallen. With other varieties, there is little sale for short Beauties.

The production of carnations was accelerated along with that of roses. The cool weather has caused the carnations to be of better quality than usual at the middle of May. There now are enough of all colors and so many white that these are hanging on wholesalers' hands and prices all along the line have been shaded materially. Carnations have been stiff in price for weeks.

There are large receipts of miscellaneous flowers. Peonies are a daily item of stock and cape jasmine is along from the south. Many additional growers are marketing sweet peas. They continue to be one of the best selling items, but prices have fallen except on the finest. There are abundant supplies of Easter lilies and callas, and the arrival of some outdoor valley has eased the market on this specialty. Considerable outdoor bulbous stock also is received, especially poets' narcissi. A few violets still are received, but of poor quality, and at this late date no one wants them. Pansies and daisies are abundant and anyone who wants irises, snapdragons, gladioli, stocks or swainsona can be accommodated. Outdoor lilac, which was abundant at this season last year, is not in the market.

There is an excellent demand for green goods. Smilax is scarce with most of the growers, but everything else is abundant. Those who are fortunate in having good ferns find a big demand at strong prices.

Tuesday was a warm day, but Wednesday it turned cold again. Cold weather will stiffen the market but warm days are needed to make a big supply for Memorial day.

Memorial Day.

The prospect for supplies for Memorial day is the principal theme of discussion in the wholesale market. For several years there has been a marked increase in the quantity of flowers required for

May 30, and, as no great number of outdoor flowers are expected to be available this year, a still further increase is anticipated. In fact, a large number of inquiries already have been received from buyers who ask prices on large lots. The indications are that there will be an abundance of roses. With favorable weather there will be a good supply of carnations, but wholesalers are not willing to book advance orders for carnations except at an open price or at an advance over last year. Of miscellaneous flowers there will be large supplies and, except for carnations, no special advance in prices is anticipated.

Peony Prospects.

There are only two or three sources of supply for early peonies. These are now sending in larger quantities than the market requires, with other stock so plentiful, and the peonies are going into cold storage for Memorial day. The quality of the stock is not up to last year, due to the cold weather, which has apparently resulted in shorter stems and smaller flowers than usual, but the first blooms never are up to the later ones. Advices are to the effect that while the early crops will be small, there will be enough to go around at Memorial day and an abundance after that.

Louis Winterson Goes West.

Louis H. Winterson will leave the E. F. Winterson Co. May 25 and about June 1 will depart, with Mrs. Winterson and their household appurtenances, for Seattle, Wash., where they will make their home. Mr. Winterson goes west to take charge of the office end for a firm of Chicago brothers who are going into business at Seattle, backed by ample capital. It is a proposition which simply looked to be too good to pass up. Louis Winterson has been associated with the E. F. Winterson Co. for a number of years and, while all will rejoice in his good fortune, his departure will be regretted by many, for he is one of the best-liked young men in the market. Prior to last December he was secretary of the Chicago Florists' Club.

Club Will Advertise.

At its meeting May 9, the Chicago Florists' Club appropriated a sum of money for the employment of a press agent to see what can be done in the way of securing publicity for the trade in the local newspapers.

There was a long discussion of advertising, particularly as affecting the retail business. There was unanimous opinion that all kinds of advertising are good, but that newspaper advertising is best. A number of the members told of the far reaching and lasting effects of some of the advertising they have done. The idea of the club in appointing a committee consisting of C. Frauenfelder, Louis Wittbold and a newspaper man to advise with a press agent is to secure the insertion in the daily papers of seasonable articles suggestive of the way flowers and plants may be used. It is certain that interesting articles of this character will be a great educational factor and result in a much larger use of flowers. The club's appropriation is necessarily a small one. It will suffice for a few weeks' trial. If the trade is pleased with the work, it will shortly be necessary to provide for its continuance through private subscription.

A communication was read from Benjamin Hammond, secretary of the Rose Society, with regard to preliminary arrangements for the rose show next March. A committee consisting of August Poehlmann, Leonard Kill and Philip Schupp was appointed to work out the details.

Forty Years Later.

Andrew McAdams has been located in Hyde Park since 1869 and in all that time, he says, he never has seen a season so unfavorable as this. Although bedding out along the lake never can be started before May 20, he is badly crowded because it has not been safe to move the young stock outside to make the usual space for the plants shortly to be sold. As a result the geraniums and other plants are becoming drawn. Mr. McAdams prides himself on growing his 4-inch geraniums just a shade better than anyone else in town and always has sale at $2 a dozen for more than he grows. He has them now in good bloom. Mr. McAdams says that he has found nothing to beat S. A. Nutt. A variety grown quite largely, called Mary McAdams, originated on the place several years ago. It is a robust plant, carrying big trusses of blooms, the individual flowers of remarkable size. The color is hard to describe; Mr. McAdams calls it cerise, or salmon scarlet. He sells this variety at $3 a dozen.

Mr. McAdams has a bench of ferns planted out: Boston, Elegantissima, and Whitmani. He says he thinks the latter an especially fine thing, but calls attention to the greater growth the Boston has made than any of the others. They all had an even start.

Selaginellas, pterises, etc., for dishes are about the only plants Mr. McAdams wholesales, small ferns being one of his most successful specialties.

Speaking of the value of real estate in his locality, Mr. McAdams said that the whole neighborhood was a slough in 1869. Now it is about the best part of Hyde Park, but land is not worth as much there as in 1893.

Various Notes.

Miss Stella Tonner and Leslie Ellithorpe were married Saturday afternoon, May 11, at the home of the bride's parents. Her sister, Miss A. L. Tonner, was bridesmaid, and her brother, Walter Tonner, was best man. There were thirty-five guests. Mr. and Mrs. Ellithorpe departed Saturday evening for Russell, Kan., where the groom farms on an extensive scale. A touch of romance is given the affair by the fact that the couple had known each other but a few weeks, Mr. Ellithorpe having recently come to Chicago to visit a relative in whose family Miss Tonner gave violin lessons. He is considerably her senior.

All the growers are, or have been, busy planting carnations in the field. Several have finished the task and the others are putting on all possible pressure. In many instances the soil was not as moist as the planters would like, but some big fields have been put out. More carnations than ever before will be grown under glass all summer, many having already been benched. Quite a few rose houses have been replanted, particularly with Beauties, and after Memorial day this work will be proceeded with in earnest.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting Chatenay roses with stems five feet long; but their Chatenay sport, named Morton Grove, has a better color. They are planting this variety largely and will introduce it next season, selling stock at a low price to induce wide distribution. They planted a field of 200,000 carnation plants in five days last week. The present crop of Easter lilies is much the best so far cut this year.

C. A. Samuelson had the family order for the Albert Keep funeral May 14, using quite a quantity of cattleyas, which fortunately were in good supply at McKellar's, a fine crop of Mossiae being now on. Wienhoeber and other leading retailers also had some good orders for the Keep funeral.

A combination not often seen was a table in the cut flower department of the E. F. Winterson Co. Monday. It carried violets and cape jasmine. The one was from Rhinebeck, N. Y., and the other from Alvin, Tex.; a case of extremes meeting.

John Evert has planted one house with October Frost and another with Clementine Tousey chrysanthemums. He is counting on profiting by a good early market, such as we had last autumn.

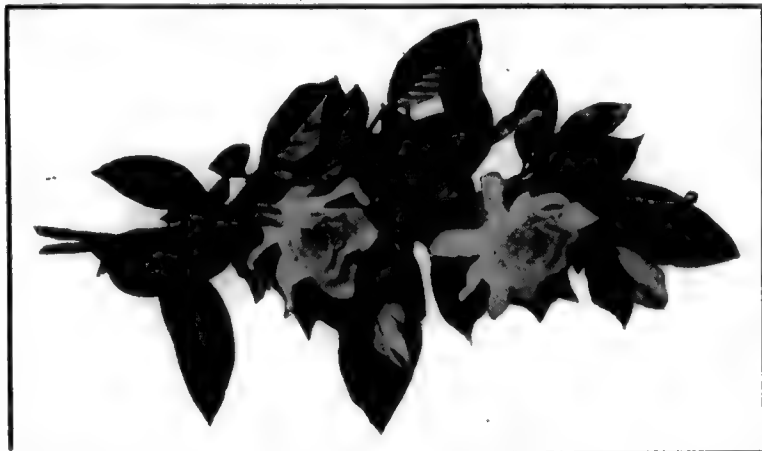

A. L. Vaughan, of Vaughan & Sperry, says the firm has advices from a grower in central Illinois that peonies will be ready just in time for Memorial day.

C. L. Washburn calls attention to the fact that the first commencements each year are those of the dental colleges, held this week. Strange as it may seem, some people always are to be found to send flowers to tooth-pullers.

Leonard Kill says he cannot remember a time when so large a part of Peter Reinberg's place has been in full crop at one time. All the houses, except those just replanted, are giving heavy cuts.

Arnold Ringier says he had an especially good trip to the coast for the

P. Broadbeck has the gutters up for the range of new houses he is building at Evanston.

E. F. Winterson has not been his usual jovial self this week, because of neuralgia in his face, but he has been on deck as usual.

Bassett & Washburn say they cut 15,000 roses last Sunday.

At E. H. Hunt's C. M. Dickinson says the demand for To-bak-ine products has become world wide, a large order having been received this week from a leading London jobber in horticultural supplies.

E. C. Amling says the call for hardy cut ferns is more active than he ever remembers it to have been. All the houses are selling boxwood in large quantities.

E. Fransen reports that Scheiden & Schoos are sold out of young stock of roses and carnations and have had a good season.

The Kennicott Bros. Co. is putting in a wood floor to cover the cement one in its new store.

Mrs. Frank Beu says the annual demand for vincas has begun on time.

George Reinberg has had a representative of the Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., here this week to see the big shipments of orchids after their long journey and to advise as to how to handle this new department of the business.

Miss Martha Gunterberg, in the Growers' Market, says she thinks too many white carnations are grown. She says she finds that almost always colored sorts bring better prices than white.

Wietor Bros. will grow a large part of their Lawson carnations indoors all summer this season, having had fine results with those so treated last season.

The florists ball team found an easy game at Washington park last Sunday. A challenge has been issued to the team of employees of the Poehlmann Bros Co.

J. Hamlin, who was with the Riverbank Nurseries, at Geneva, has left to go to Denver to go into business with a brother.

There is a good display of tulips in each of the parks and the beds will be about at their best next Sunday, although there is rather more difference than usual in the flowering dates of the several varieties.

J. F. Klimmer says the cold nights have made him sweat. The reason for it is that he has for more than a fortnight had several thousands of the new varieties of carnations, that cost him 10 cents apiece, planted in the field. Several nights the temperature has been down to the danger point. On the worst of the nights he has covered a large part of the stock with flower pots, although it was not possible in a day to put the pots on all of them and get them off again next day. He says the work of bedding out in the cemeteries adjoining his place is about two weeks later than usual in starting this year.

Leopold Koropp says that business is excellent; in fact, that he has more work than he can do, especially outdoor jobs. He recently has issued a neat booklet for telephone numbers for distribution among his customers, as he finds a large part of his business comes by phone, requiring two instruments.

Robert Newcomb, who came to Chicago from Des Moines, Ia., and worked for the Central Floral Co. and others, is now located at Oakland, Cal., with Clarke Bros., who recently have opened a fine new store there.

H. N. Bruns says he has had an excellent season thus far. There has been an excellent demand for valley, with only a brief period of oversupply. He looks for good business through May and June.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business has been slow, with cut flowers abundant in all lines. Funerals and a few early commencements for young doctors make about the only work that is going on among the retailers. Of course, the greenhouse men are exceedingly busy just now, taking care of outdoor planting orders which have been piled up, waiting for seasonable weather.

The wholesalers are having a busy time getting rid of stock that is left over after the morning's sales, and all their ice-boxes are full. Roses are a great glut and there is no stable price. Long, fancy Beauties are so plentiful that a great many have been going to waste.

Carnations have been scarce for a long time, but are now plentiful and no doubt will soon be a glut. The stock is fine and prices low. Harrisii and calla lilies, too, are many more than the trade can use. Outdoor valley has crowded the indoor valley, as it is much cheaper. Sweet peas are becoming more abundant each day. The lighter shades are selling well, but cheaply. A great deal of outdoor stock is now coming in, such as peonies,

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club held its regular monthly meeting May 9. It was gratifying to the officers to see such a large attendance at a May meeting, as usually this meeting is poorly attended owing to the rush of the planting season. Twenty-one members were in attendance when President Irish called to order, and all the other officers responded to their names during roll call.

The trustees reported, through Chairman Smith, that all arrangements have been made for the club's celebration June 29. This being Saturday night, a large delegation will be in attendance. Invitations will be sent to all the members.

The trustees were instructed to make arrangements for the club's annual picnic, during July, and to make a report at the June meeting. The treasurer's report showed that the club's treasury is in a healthy condition.

Theodore G. Brown was elected to membership and the application of Conrad Bergsterman was received.

The question box brought out nine questions, which made things interesting, especially on the question of fumigation, which was discussed by J. F. Ammann, Prof. Irish and Mr. Fulgraf. This the president will have continued at the next meeting. The membership of the club has again reached 100.

Various Notes.

Owing to the cold and wet weather, the spring flower show of the Engelmann Botanical Club has been postponed for two weeks.

Carl Beyer has taken off a big slice of his surplus avoirdupois and looks as trim as a spring chicken. He will soon be back to bowling form. He once was known as king among the florist bowlers.

Frank A. Weber is making preparations for a large party to go from here to Detroit for the convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, which will be held June 12 to 14.

The planting season has at last opened. A few warm days last week brought out a large force of men, planting in the city parks. So far everything is looking fine. The planting will be under the supervision of Superintendent George Ostertag, who had his plans laid out for this work a month ago.

George Schriefer, at C. A. Kuehn's, has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his father, who died May 12.

Fred Pape did a fine job in bedding at the Forest park highlands.

At Delmar Garden the bedding is done under the supervision of W. C. Young, of C. Young & Sons Co., who have the contract.

For the charity carnival held at Delmar Garden May 10 great quantities of cut flowers were donated by the wholesalers and retailers, which brought big prices. The wealthy society ladies had booths all over the garden.

The preliminary list for the St. Louis Horticultural Society's fall flower show has been issued. It carries the usual Shaw premiums, amounting to $500, including the Henry Shaw gold medal. The other premiums for chrysanthemums, carnations, roses and floral designs amount to $1,036, making a total of $1,536 for premiums for the show.

The Market.

We are unable to speak enthusiastically of the market at present. Weather has remained unseasonably cold, with much of it damp and dark, but far more material has arrived than was needed. Probably warmer and brighter weather might stimulate purchases, but the close approach of Memorial day will tend to brace up prices, temporarily at least. Roses are in abundant supply and many have to be cleared at quite low figures. Carnations vary from $1 to $3 per hundred, a few fancies going higher. A few double violets are still arriving of good quality for the season. Sweet peas are in heavy supply, but are good selling flowers. The colors are right. Bulbous stock is again overabundant, a lot of outdoor stock being now available in tulips and narcissi. Spanish iris is of good quality and sells fairly well. Gladioli are quite abundant. There are the usual quantities of marguerites, antirrhinums and other flowers.

Green stock is of good quality, with little change except in the case of hardy green ferns, which are arriving much better.

Visit to General Weld.

On invitation of General S. M. Weld, president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, members of the trustee board, past and present, visited and were entertained by him May 11. The members of the party left the south station at 11:48 and on arrival at Dedham were taken in carriages to General Weld's home. A regular business meeting of the board was first held and among other ing off beautifully. The estate comprises about 1,000 acres, the mansion standing on the crest of the highest elevation. The land is naturally rocky and no attempt at formal gardening has been attempted, but the rocks and ravines, with streamlets and ponds, have been utilized for an extensive system of alpine and natural gardening, the winding paths disclosing fresh objects to excite interest and admiration at every turn. Bulbs of many kinds, trilliums, dwarf phloxes, hepaticas, mertensias, anemones, ranunculi, myosotis and other suitable plants are now blooming and will be followed by scores of other varieties, many of which are rare and unique. The collection of coniferæ and the greenhouses were later inspected. The latter contain roses, carnations, grapes, peaches and miscellaneous stock. The conservatory attached to the mansion was gay with well grown schizanthus, Canterbury bells, azaleas, herbaceous calceolarias and other seasonable flowers, while near by beds were brilliant with tulips, narcissi and hyacinths. General Weld and Thomas Coles, his head gardener, have accomplished splendid results in the last few years and still have unbounded scope in which to develop. The party reached Boston on the return trip after a most delightful, interesting and instructive afternoon's outing.

Various Notes.

The next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will occur at Horticultural hall, on the evening of May 21. In lieu of a regular lecture there will be ten-minute talks by three members of the club, on "Bulbs as Bedding Plants," "Herbaceous Plants for Bedding Purposes," and "Tender Bedding Plants." There will be interesting exhibits of seasonable flowers and other attractions.

Owing to the unusually cold season, double violets of excellent quality are still arriving in the markets, those from Thomas Pegler, of Wallaston, and Southworth, of West Stoughton, being specially good.

Trade in bedding plants is late in starting. Some growers have not brought in a plant yet. It looks at this time as though lilac, Darwin and other late-flowering tulips, Narcissus poeticus and outdoor valley would all be available for Memorial day trade. As a rule they are on the wane at that date.

Interest in the club picnic is beginning to show itself. The married men are this year determined to beat the bachelors at baseball. We hear rumors that the commercial growers, remembering last year's experience, have secured an option on a steel hawser to assist in pulling the private gardeners over the picnic grounds. A record entry is promised for the fat men's race.

Seed merchants report a dragging season, which promises also to be a long one. The unusually cold and damp spring has lessened sales to some customers, but the aggregate promises to equal last year's, if it does not surpass it.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Immense quantities of flowers are sold daily, but larger quantities are received. This about covers the situation. Business is good for the season, quality generally all that could be desired, where stock has been given intelligent care. Beauties are plentiful, fine, and in fair demand. There is no special demand for Liberty and Richmond. The quality is better than anything ever seen before in this market in May. The second crop of Kaiserin is in full supply. Outdoor valley has made its appearance, depreciating the indoor-grown stock. Sweet peas have fallen off in quality, owing to the dark weather of last week. Two new orchids, Cattleya gigas and Laelia purpurata, have reinforced Cattleya Mossiae this week. Violets are over. Their season has been a month longer than usual. Some wild violets are seen. Jersey lilac is plentiful but not in demand. White carnations still far exceed the colored varieties in numbers. The supply of callas has decreased. Harrisii lilies are in fair demand. The demand for smilax has fallen off; prices are receding. Snapdragon has never been finer than this spring. It is still of excellent quality, and is in demand. Dagger ferns are scarce and selling well.

florist; social calls by the lesser florist on the greater, and then the latter is free to return the call at his discretion. This question of rank is complex. It is often most difficult to determine who should pay the first visit between a given pair of florists, as there is no tribunal to decide points of floral etiquette. Many calls are unfortunately never made. I say unfortunately, because an exchange of ideas is one of the greatest blessings to the hardworking florist.

Now it happened at a meeting of the Florists' Club that William A. Leonard met Phil and, after a pleasant chat, cordially invited him to call. Phil, being hazy as to who should call first, replied: "With pleasure, and you must come and see me." So it stood for some time until the Dickson banquet, when these courtesies were substantially repeated. Neither would give in on this delicate point. They met again at Washington in March. Mr. Leonard was so cordial that Phil decided to give in, a decision the more easily made because Mr. Leonard had asked to be introduced at the aforesaid Florists' Club dozen houses, or, if you prefer to call it so, three. There are two ranges of six each and one detached, comprising perhaps 30,000 feet of glass. All but one are devoted to roses in solid beds. Brides and Maids are the staples, to use a supply term. Richmond is a novelty, while Killarney and a new pink seedling are being tried. The stock was in good condition. It was evident that the Leo Nielsen Co. has lately been receiving heavy shipments containing a good proportion of high grade blooms.

A most interesting feature of the place is that a definite purpose has been steadily kept in view through every detail of construction and management.

The May Meeting.

President Pennock called a large gathering of Florists' Club members to order May 7. The important committee report was made by Charles D. Ball, who said the finances for the August convention of the national society are in a flourishing condition; contributions are coming in at an encouraging rate. The report of William Graham, for the bowling committee, was read by the secretary. It provided for a series of games to be rolled to decide the membership in the team to represent this city in the national tournament. All members desiring to compete should notify Mr. Graham. The resignation of Edwin Lonsdale, secretary of the club, was again presented and this time accepted, with sincere regret. David Rust was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy.

J. Otto Thilow delivered his paper in fine style, receiving hearty applause.

Alphonse Pericat, of Collingdale, exhibited a spike of Cattleya gigas Sanderiana of great size, its beautiful flowers being much admired.

Samuel Batchelor, gardener to Clement B. Newbold, Jenkintown, exhibited some fine pelargoniums.

Soft Wooded Plants.

The oldest gardener has been astonished by the weather this month. There was ice Sunday morning, May 12, when everybody tells you geraniums are perfectly safe outdoors after May 10. The geraniums that were planted out last week look most unhappy now. Despite this bad start, the bedding season is opening in earnest. There are many window-boxes going up in the city and in the suburbs. There are beds to be filled, and porch-boxes are now being filled in the greenhouse. An early Easter and a late spring are most favorable for the class of florists who grow this class of stock, and indications point to an excellent season.

Various Notes.

William H. Ferguson & Son have bought the building at 1208 Spring Garden street, near their present store. They will move their retail florists' business to the new building this summer.

William J. Moore joined the forces of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. last Monday.

A feature of this convention was the large use of cotton described in these columns after the Christmas holidays. It is a specialty with W. E. McKissick and he handled it in quantity. The packing, by the way, of this cotton is remarkably well done.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Thomas Love, of South Bethlehem, Pa., is one of the few veterans in the profession who can boast of a record of thirty-six years' continuous service in one place. He has just rounded out this length of time on the beautiful estate of G. B. Linderman and has practically planted every tree flourishing thereon. He looks good for another span of the same length of time.

Timothy Hogan, who has charge of the E. P. Wilbur estate, grows annually a grand lot of gloxinias from leaf cuttings. As decorative plants they are gorgeous, and while not profitable to grow commercially, a few are fine for window decoration. William Scott, of Buffalo, has grown a large number each year and sold them at good prices.

Ernest Ashler, of Allentown, Pa., has a most unique flower store. The sides are covered with mirrors of various sizes, bordered with birch bark and moss. Kift's flower holders are used to advantage. This end of the business is presided over by his clever little side partner, who keeps the boys hustling at the greenhouse end to supply the stock necessary for a rapidly increasing business.

A. B. Ellsworth, of Allentown, reports a busy seed business. The backward season has caused a rush which will soon be over.

F. Horn & Bro., of Allentown, have a big stock of bedding plants, a leading line with them.

Ira G. Marvin, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., is reported as having purchased a coal breaker for the purpose of supplying the necessary fuel to heat his big plant. One of the largest electric signs I have seen was being erected at the time of my visit.

ports the biggest season on record, both in seeds and plants. He has also a big nursery business. Here can be found everything pertaining to floriculture and ornithology. Something unique is the training of the loquacious parrot, it being the special duty of a clever lad, during spare hours, to teach this bird how to talk. Above the rush and bustle, following the stereotyped "Polly wants a cracker," was heard such remarks as "Clark, you're all right. There's no flies on you."

James B. Tully, Binghamton, N. Y., has been unable to carry on the business since last fall, when he was laid out. His busy side partner has kept things going with the help of a reliable man. Men of this kind are met with occasionally. I understand that W. H. Graham is giving up his houses, intending to devote his whole time to the store and conservatory. W. States Cut Flower Co., in Elmira, N. Y. Lord & Burnham have one of their best mechanics on the job. Richard King says he will turn out finer stock than ever in this new range.

H. N. Hoffman, of Elmira, is a busy fellow. He is on the advisory board of the Cut Flower Co., steward of the fine estate of J. Sloate Fassett, executor of the big Hoffman estate, a live nurseryman, farmer and florist.

Frank Durand handles the local output of the Cut Flower Co., and finds it very convenient since disposing of the old Rawson plant. He is an artist of note and has had charge of the finest decorations seen in this hustling town.

A. H. Woeppel, of Corning, N. Y., was very busy at the time of my visit. Congratulations are in order; the stork passed over from Hoffman's, where he had dropped a lusty boy, and left a rosebud with Mr. Woeppel, who says it is the prettiest of the bunch.

W. A. Wettin, of Hornellsville, N. Y., will put in his spare time this summer remodeling the store, making two into one, with a plate glass front. A good cellar will be built.

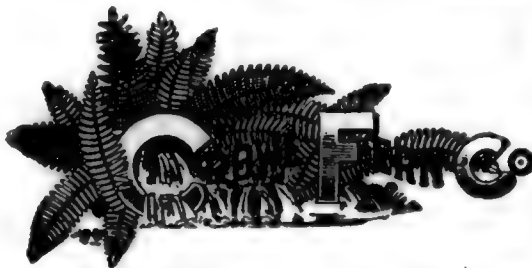

D. R. Herron, of Olean, N. Y., has the only conservatory on the main street and finds business warrants the expense. One must be up to date these times.

F. H. Johnson, of Olean, was laid up last winter, just at the time old Boreas was getting in his worst licks. Mr. Johnson is a veteran of the civil war and, with his pleasant side partner, does a snug, profitable business.

says Queen Louise is the best white carnation with him today. His stock of spring plants is evidence of good care.

The Lake View Rose Gardens, in Jamestown, N. Y., are steadily nearing the city with the big range of glass going up. There is quite a stretch of land not yet covered, but with the demand for stock it looks as though there is not enough to provide for the needs of the future. A big handicap with Supt. Roney is the difficulty in getting competent help. He has hit upon a plan to form a night school for the purpose of studying Latin, as the sons of sunny Italy are being trained for the profession of rose growers and carnationists. It is to be hoped a repetition of the rude shock sustained by a trusted employee of Mr. Reuter will not happen here. Evidently the gentleman in question was anxious the intended victim should pass away amid the posies. Geo. Heelas, the artistic decorator at Lake View, says he is kept very busy filling orders for the noted brand of plant food introduced by Walter Mott when here.

M. I. O'Brien, of Sharon, Pa., after July 1 will transfer his business to Walter Mott and Frank Burfitt, who will conduct the same under the firm name of Mott & Burfitt. As the good will goes with the business, the new firm cannot fail to score a success. W. M.

LOCKPORT, N. Y.

Fred G. Lewis reports that last Friday, May 10, it commenced snowing in the afternoon and for three hours it snowed harder than it did any time last winter. A great deal of it melted as it fell, but at six o'clock there were four inches left. The temperature went down to 28 degrees that night. Saturday night it went down to 24 degrees. Carnations that he had planted out in the field looked a little sick, but he thinks they will come out all right.

Frank B. Lewis lost a good many tomato plants. They were in frames with glass and straw mats on top, and bonfires going around and among the frames.

May 13 the weather was warm and bright.

FLORISTS GET STATE AID.

Illinois to Build Greenhouses.

In the closing days of the session the Illinois legislature appropriated $7,500 for the erection of greenhouses for research and experimental work at the State Agricultural College, the idea being to devote attention to florists' problems. The favorable outcome was due to more than two years of persistent work on the part of the Illinois State Florists' Association, during which it was shown to the legislature that commercial floriculture in Illinois, according to the census of 1900, represents a larger aggregate business than does commercial orcharding, which long has enjoyed state assistance.

J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, until recently president of the Illinois State Florists' Association, has worked indefatigably for the appropriation and when it finally was granted he was so pleased that he sat down at his desk and penned the following in bright purple ink and mailed it to the REVIEW:

Congratulations, Florists!

The Illinois State Florists' Association has at last found an opening and pried its wedge into the legislature for a small appropriation to carry on experimental work. While the appropriation is small, nevertheless it is a beginning, and it now behooves us to make the best of it for all concerned. This is a tie that should bind us closer together. I hope we all realize that our work is just begun. I, for one, feel very much gratified at the work accomplished so far, and I take this opportunity to thank all those of the trade, and especially the legislators who so kindly assisted in this work.

J. F. AMMANN.

Representative Heinl, a son of Joseph Heinl, the old and well known florist of Jacksonville, is the man who put the appropriation through.

NATURAL FERTILIZERS.

About how long a time must be allowed for horse or cow manure to reach that state often referred to in these columns as "half rotted" and "well rotted"? Can poultry and pigeon manure be used in the greenhouse? How may it be applied, and in what quantity?

E. C. B.

We find that cow manure that is brought to us in the winter will be right for use next fall and winter. By turning it a few times it can be worked into condition somewhat quicker. Mixing in an equal bulk of soil also will help. Horse manure requires about the same time; in fact, it can be used as soon as the heat is out of it. Poultry manure is excellent for feeding if used cautiously. Mix it with three times its bulk of soil and let it decompose, turning it occasionally to prevent heating, and next winter use it as you would sheep manure.

DUTY ON ROSE CUTTINGS.

A report from Buffalo, dated May 10, says: "Judge Hazel yesterday afternoon handed down an opinion in a case sought by the government against the American Express Co. on an appeal from a decision of the customs board of general appraisers. The opinion sustains the action taken by the government officials in charging twenty-five per cent duty on rose cuttings imported into this country from Canada.

"The rose cuttings were brought here by the American Express Co., representatives of which held that they were not dutiable. The matter was brought before Judge Hazel by United States District Attorney Bass and his assistant, Donald Bain, and after hearing the arguments the court ruled that rose cuttings came under the title of greenhouse and nursery stock and were therefore dutiable under the customs law. The express company did not appear to put in an argument."

This is presumed to be the case involving an importation for Heller Bros., of the South Park Floral Co., New Castle, Ind., a couple of years ago. If so it upholds the contention of the importer and affirms the decision of the board of general appraisers at the time: that the stock was dutiable at twenty-five per cent of its value, the local appraiser having assessed duty under another paragraph of the law at 2½ cents each. The treasury department appealed.

BOXWOOD AND CAMELLIAS.

I have a lot of large boxwood about four feet high which I would like to move and put some of them in tubs. Would you kindly inform me the best time to take them up, and would it be safe to do so? I have also four or five large camellias four or five feet high. They have been blooming four years. Would it be safe to move them? When would be the best time?

R. S. W.

An excellent time to move evergreens is just when new growth is commencing in spring. Probably by this time the new shoots will have started, but evergreens can be safely transplanted almost any time during the summer if lifted with good balls and transplanted with care. The roots should not be exposed any more than possible and it would be well to dampen before filling in much loam. A thorough soaking of water when the plants are moved, a syringe overhead several times on bright days and a mulching over the roots of the camellias if they are planted in the open should insure success. If from any reason the planting is deferred it would be best to wait until August before doing it. Cloudy and showery weather is ideal for this work. Do not attempt it if there is a strong drying wind. It might be advisable to give the boxwood a shady location, such as would be afforded by some overhanging tree, for a few weeks.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907

It is hot in the Santa Clara valley.

PLANT imports are being delayed by the stevedores' strike in New York.

THE prospects are that radish will again be one of the scarce items next season.

THE return of spring brought a rush of counter trade, but mail order business is practically over.

WEATHER conditions continue to make the retail seed business erratic in all sections of the country.

SPRING has not yet come in the Michigan pea and bean districts. Seeding operations everywhere are late.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a bulletin on the corn leaf-aphis and corn root-aphis which will interest seedsmen and especially growers of seed corn.

THE calls for seed for replanting operations have not been up to anticipations and the general opinion is that the loss of early plantings was not so heavy as at first reported.

THE Chicago growers of onion sets are feeling a little more cheerful. They have got out a fair acreage and the stand on the early planted fields is better than was anticipated.

ADOLF KRUEHM, formerly with W. Atlee Burpee & Co., is now with F. Barteldes & Co., Lawrence, Kan., and will have charge of their retail trade and catalogue business.

D. LANDRETH SEED CO., Bristol, Pa., reports that its crop of Seven-top turnip, now in bloom, has been injured so seriously by cold weather that the prospects for seeds have been reduced to almost nothing.

THE temperate climate as well as the good, irrigated soil of the southeastern district of France, the Provence, quite properly called the garden of France, places that country in a favorable position to produce, with a real success, nearly all sorts of seeds, and the industry there is steadily on the increase.

KNUD GUNDESTRUP, Chicago, will sail from New York June 8, for a trip to Europe, and will return about the middle of August. He will be accompanied by his family. They will stop first in England, and, after a short stay there, will go to Denmark, where Mr. Gundestrup will leave his family while he visits seed growers in France. After making a tour of Germany together, they will embark from a German port for their return voyage. Mr. Gundestrup expects to bring with him, when he returns, a seed-testing machine which he believes to be superior to any machine now used for that purpose in America.

Bros., completed arrangements yesterday to move the firm's seed business from Chicago to Council Bluffs. The new seed house will occupy part of the first floor and office rooms in the Keystone, the transfer to be effected May 17. The firm has been established in Chicago for some time, but it was decided after careful investigation that Council Bluffs offered better shipping facilities and was more centrally located for the seed business, and for these reasons the change was decided upon."

HENRY FIELD'S PROGRESS.

Henry Field's business at Shenandoah, Ia., has grown from practically nothing five years ago to large proportions, just about doubling each year. His business this year will aggregate 20,000 orders, amounting to close to $100,000. The seeds are sold over all parts of the United States and many orders come from foreign countries, for he has original methods of advertising. During the rush time this spring Mr. Field had eighty-seven men and boys on his pay roll and the wages amounted to $750 per week. The last week in April he had fifty-eight men employed and paid out $445 for help. He employs only men and boys—even his stenographers are men.

Mr. Field says that his business has grown to such proportions that he must incorporate and build a new warehouse or he must curtail the business and handle only a few select lines. He will probably incorporate for $100,000. He will retain half of the stock himself and the other half will be taken by his close friends and employees. The Shenandoah people congratulate themselves that if Mr. Field's plans are carried out they will, in a short time, have in the town the largest seed business in Iowa, if not in the entire west.

To the above Mr. Field adds under date of May 14: "Please make note of the fact that I have formed a company to take over my seed business, with myself in control. Will build a fireproof building costing approximately $30,000. Also expect to improve and beautify the grounds about the building and make it a semi-public park and show place. Will put in the latest improved seed machinery. Will be glad to hear from parties interested in any of these lines."

BULBS IN HOLLAND.

No trade visitor to Holland can possibly fail to notice the enormous extent to which the culture of bulbs has extended during the last few years. Not only have fresh fields been added to old grounds, but huge areas of some hundreds of acres have been transformed from woods to level fields intersected by canals and planted with bulbs. We speak now of the development in well-known districts, but there are hundreds of acres in other parts, where formerly it was considered impossible to cultivate bulbs, which are now carrying good crops of tulips, narcissi, etc., and we are credibly informed that the amount of land under bulb culture is five times more than it was ten years ago.

During the last year or two the demand for many bulbs, especially tulips, has been marvelous, for in addition to the export trade large stocks have been required to plant up all the new land which has been developed, and thus the grower has been in clover, while the exporter has had to supply bulbs at prices, fixed in his catalogue, which, when he had to purchase supplementary stocks, left him with no margin of profit, or with an actual loss. However brilliant this business may have been, our Holland friends have a wide open eye to the future, and the growers begin to ask themselves how will things be when the home demand drops off? They also realize that at any rate in England the demand for hyacinths for forcing in pots is not a growing, but rather a diminishing one, while year by year amateurs demand bulbs at lower prices for this culture.

It was possibly with these thoughts in mind, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser, that the Society of Dutch Bulb Growers gave this year at Sassenheim the first annual exhibition outdoors, the idea being to demonstrate the value of these bulbs for bedding purposes, and the manner in which they should be planted to obtain the best effect.

The main point to be noted was the way in which the bulbs were planted, which is, roughly speaking, about twice as thickly as one is accustomed to see them. In the case of hyacinths, young bulbs are used, and they nearly touched each other, while the blooms completely covered the beds, producing a grand effect. Some idea of the planting may be gained from the fact that circular beds ten feet in diameter contain 500 bulbs of hyacinths or 900 tulips, while the largest bed, which has a diameter of thirty-three feet, contained 10,000 hyacinths.

Tulips were planted in similar fashion, and also daffodils, one of the finest beds in the show being a crescent-shaped bed of Bicolor Victoria, which was worth a journey to see.

The arrangement of colors in the beds was very pleasing. One bed of Roi des Belges, with a border of King of the Yellows, was especially effective; other good beds were Rose à Merveille, a good blush hyacinth; Prince de Ligne, a very early yellow tulip, La Remarquable and Red Pottebakker tulips. With these exceptions, the bulk of the bulbs were old and well-known varieties.

SEED TRADE STATISTICS.

Frederic J. Haskin has been collecting data on the extent of the seed trade and sets forth some of his findings as follows:

Twenty-five years ago by far the larg-east percentage of seeds used in America was imported from Europe, where the industry has received more careful attention than here. Now there are 150 large seed firms in America, each handling hundreds of thousands of pounds annually. In many instances they have specialized, and handle only one kind of seed. Twenty-five of these firms deal only in peas and beans, eight in cabbages, eight in tomatoes, lettuce, cucumbers, onions, melons and beets.

The money these firms pay into the Santa Clara Valley of California amounts to more than $1,500,000 yearly. This valley produces a little more than 2,000,000 pounds of seed per annum, and from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 pounds are sold yearly in the United States.

Central Michigan and western New York produce almost all the bean seed used in this country. One locality in Michigan produces 75,000 bushels yearly. Potatoes and corn are sold so extensively that no estimate can be made of the amount produced each year. Two million pounds of turnip seed go into American soil every season, but most of it is imported from England. One million pounds of radishes are planted here, one-tenth of which is raised in California, some in Michigan and the rest in Europe. Of the million pounds of seed onions which the annual crop demands, California yields 700,000 pounds. More than half the million pounds of cabbage seed used in our crops is grown in our own soil.

partment of Agriculture, which discovered it in Bohemia. Trials in many places appear to show that under good cultivation it possesses vigorous growth, large size of root, freedom from fibers and prongs, extra keen and pungent flavor, earliness and clean, white skin. It gives better roots with less trouble, not being inclined to waste its energies in useless blooms and heavy foliage. Practical growers who have tried it say that its early maturity and whiteness of skin are qualities particularly valuable to pickle packers, as it is ready for use in October of the year planted, while the common kind does not really mature until the following spring. Immature horseradish has a rank, unpleasant and at times bitter taste, moderate pungency and the grated root soon darkens and loses strength. A writer in the Rural New Yorker says his experience is that the Maliner variety, dug any time after the foliage dies down, grates white and clean, with but little loss, on account of the thin, smooth skin, and keeps its color and sharpness many weeks, without any preservative, if mixed with good vinegar and kept covered in the usual way. One large grower says it yielded last year one-third more than the ordinary sort, many roots weighing two and a half pounds each, and realized 7 cents the pound in the wholesale markets. Good common horseradish sells at wholesale for prices varying from 3 cents to 5 cents a pound.

The Maliner Kren horseradish takes its name from a village in Bohemia, where the variety probably originated or at least has been cultivated from time immemorial. The output from the Maliner district is celebrated throughout middle Europe and sells for better prices in the large capitals than any other. Some of it even finds its way to this country, where it sells at fancy prices. Long continued selection has probably developed the special qualities for which this variety is prized, and under careless culture it will likely degenerate. Plants are still scarce in this country, but are listed by at least one seedsman.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Planting Season.

Preparations are now under full headway for the summer, and florists and private gardeners are alike very busy; more so because of the unusually cold weather of April and the first week in May. In fact, the weather is still cool enough to prevent the planting outdoors of many things that in ordinary seasons would at this time have a good start made in the ground.

Careful observation of planting operations in this and other sections of the Island warrant the opinion that, notwithstanding the great run on evergreens during the last few years, the planting of deciduous trees is on the increase, with Norway maples in the lead. English lindens are scarce, in consequence of an unprecedented demand last fall, especially for the larger size trees.

The demand for herbaceous plants, so called, is more pronounced than ever, with evidences of a general knowledge of what is wanted cropping up when customers order fewer varieties and a greater number of plants of those of undoubted merit from a viewpoint of practical utility. A few years ago surprisingly few peonies were seen in the gardens of Newport, considering how comparatively ancient a great many of these gardens are. Within a year or two quite a large number of the beautiful things have been planted here, for the gratification principally of those cottage owners who come in time to see them at their best, and also for the pleasure of those who pop in once in a while on flying visits before they come for the season. By the way, the lateness of the opening of the Newport season has been mainly responsible for the neglect of many meritorious plants by the craft here.

Arbor Day.

Arbor day was observed in the public schools by literary exercises and in a still more appropriate manner by the planting of numerous trees in various parts of the city and in the laying out and allotment of school gardens. These gardens will be of much more than usual interest to both teachers and pupils this year, by reason of the liberal cash premiums offered by the Horticultural Society for those that will in the opinion of competent judges be justly entitled to awards as a result of the painstaking industry of the little gardeners. The superintendent of schools was this week the recipient of a huge bundle of schedules of premiums to be awarded at the June exhibition of the Horticultural Society. It is supposed the purpose for which the secretary of the society intended these was to inform the pupils of the school garden prizes, as well as of the fact that numerous prizes will be awarded to the children for cut flowers and for vegetables. The superintendent, however, found a different use for them. He immediately distributed them to the pupils of the botany classes. Not a bad idea, but had a forecast of it come to the attention of the committee getting up the schedule, a few features peculiarly interesting to botany students would no doubt have been added.

Various Notes.

Many principals or representatives of the florist firms doing a summer business on the avenue were here recently, making final preparations for resuming business for the season, among them Mr. Spaulding, of the J. M. Hodgson Co. Richard Merrit is no longer connected in a business way with that corporation, although the family relations existing between him and the other members of the firm will doubtless serve to continue a measure of mutual interest.

There is some curiosity, if not a little anxiety, aroused by the introduction into the city council of a measure having for its object the taxing of concerns that do business here for the summer and remove to New York and other cities in the winter. Although there are engaged in this practice firms doing business of various kinds, still florists are numerous and out of proportion to other lines. Opinion is somewhat divided as to the feasibility of the proposed ordinance, not to mention the more vital point of the general good, that would result from its passage.

There is in Newport a great demand yearly for plants of large size for the interior decoration of dwellings, more especially palms. Heretofore there seemed to be but little difficulty experienced by dealers in procuring the required number, but during the last one or two seasons the constant call for them here, augmented by a presumable demand in other places, has caused a noticeable scarcity. In years gone by, areas were used considerably for the purposes mentioned, but their somewhat tender character caused them to be all but discarded in favor of kentias, which are in almost every way superior excepting of course in point of gracefulness, but that is lost sight of when in a short time they show signs of not being adapted to the conditions of their surroundings. There is a great demand from city concerns for large plants of aspi-

WHITE FLY ON TOMATOES.

I am growing tomatoes in my greenhouse. They are about twenty inches high and in good condition, but are now being attacked by small white flies. These are very numerous and seem to damage the foliage. I have smoked them with tobacco stems and with nicotine papers, but it does not seem to affect them. Will you kindly tell me how I can get rid of them, also your opinion as to whether they are destructive to tomatoes, roses and other plants grown in greenhouses? W. L.

The only certain cure I know of for the white fly is hydrocyanic acid gas. Tobacco in any form does not seem to be strong enough to kill it, but the gas certainly will. It will be necessary, however, to apply it about three times, about eight days apart, to exterminate the fly, as the gas will only kill the live insects and will not reach them in the egg stage. It takes, I believe, about three weeks from the time the egg is laid for the insect to hatch, but by operating with the gas at intervals of about eight days the insects are caught before they get settled in their family arrangements.

This insect succumbs readily to the gas, so I would not advise you to use it very strong. About one ounce of cyanide of potassium to one thousand cubic feet of space will be strong enough to kill them, and this strength will not hurt any plants you may have in the house along with the tomatoes. The proportions we use are five ounces cyanide, one quart sulphuric acid and one quart of water, this being sufficient to kill the white fly in a house containing 5,000 cubic feet of space.

You are probably aware of the dangerous nature of this gas if the materials are carelessly handled, but I never care to recommend it without a word of warning as to its dangerous nature.

You must first find out the cubic space in your house. In a house containing 5,000 feet it is best to use two jars, to insure even distribution, but a smaller house could be done with one, this being set in the center of the house. Use earthenware jars, large enough to guard against the material boiling over. First place in the jar the quantity of acid and water necessary, then drop the cyanide in and get out and make for the door, making sure to lock this behind you. All other doors to the house should have been locked before beginning operations. The best time to use the gas is in the evening, leaving the house closed all night, and by morning it can be entered with safety.

These insects are certainly destructive to plants and are very undesirable tenants to have in a greenhouse.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

My early cabbage plants grew rapidly after sowing, until they were about an inch and a half in height, when they began to change in color to a reddish blue, and finally the leaves began dropping off. Transplanted stock acted the same way. They rooted freely and it seems that all growth went to the roots. They finally became unsalable. The tomato plants were similarly affected, turning blue in the stems, while the leaves turned yellow and dropped off at a height of about four inches. All the plants root freely and the growth seems to be confined chiefly to the roots. Aster seedlings prosper, also verbenas. Lettuce grows principally to roots; the lower leaves turn yellow and form no heads. The soil was taken out of my former garden, which was fertilized for the last five years with chicken manure, put on in the fall. No fertilizer at all was given to the cabbage in the house. The soil is a dark brown loam, and hardens quickly to a crust, when it becomes dry.

F. N. B.

Your trouble seems to be due to sourness in the soil. I would advise you to procure soil from some old pasture instead of using old garden soil, which has been heavily manured for a number of years and is more or less of a fatty nature and unsuitable for use in a greenhouse for almost any class of plants. Try to procure a few loads of sod from some old pasture; pile it up and leave it for about six months, so that the grass will be rotted out before using. The fiber in this will keep the soil open and free. For growing cabbage, tomatoes or any other small plants, no manure whatever is necessary. There will be plenty of nutriment in the soil itself to sustain them until they are large enough for planting out, and they will make a firmer and better growth without the assistance of manure.

HISTORY OF THE VIOLET.

The fact that the growing of violets for the San Francisco market has practically passed into the hands of the Italians, and also that there is no variety cultivated to any extent except Princess of Wales, shows another instance of the survival of the fittest.

It is probably twenty years since the boom for violet growing commenced in the neighborhood of Menlo Park. At that time the old-fashioned Russian, the Neapolitan and the Swanley White were grown in about equal numbers. A few patches were to be found all the way from San Francisco along the country roads as far as Belmont, cultivated principally by Italians. When it was found, however, that the rich, mellow soil of San Mateo and Menlo were particularly adapted to their growing, many acres of ground were devoted to their culture, with good profit.

About this time the California violet made its appearance and this favored locality scored more of a success than ever. The growers had everything in their hands for a few seasons and made money rapidly.

The Italian growers at length began to find there was no longer any demand for the old-fashioned, purple and blue violets, and so they began to weed them out and replant with California. The Chinese, in turn, began to get interested, and in a couple of seasons, although their stock was not equal to that produced under more favorable auspices on the larger places, still they succeeded in lowering the prices so that the others could not compete, and the beds were allowed to go to ruin.

In the meanwhile the Princess of Wales violet appeared on the horizon and was quickly taken in hand by the growers who had ceased to make money out of the others. A short and successful season attended their efforts again, until the stock was disseminated among the smaller growers. Then a three-cornered fight was waged between the large growers in the more aristocratic section, the Chinese growers in the immediate neighborhood and the Italian growers in the vicinity of Ocean View and South San Francisco. The Italians won out because they had the faculty of raising large families, who invariably did all the picking. As the Chinese, Japanese and others did not seem to be blessed in the same way, there was but one result, and that was that practically every violet grower from San Francisco to Menlo Park went out of business except the Italians, and they entirely control the trade today.

When, during the race for supremacy, it was evident that the picking proposition was the one that was most concerned in the controversy, the growers one by one began discarding the double sorts, as they cannot be gathered so readily or bunched to such advantage. The public, in the meanwhile, seeing so few Marie Louise or any other of the double sorts in evidence, apparently forgot all about them, and the retailers, knowing what a difficulty was always experienced in trying to fill orders for them, ceased recommending them, and now they are rarely seen here.

This is the history of the violet in this

OAKLAND, CAL.

Clarke Bros. have recently opened a new retail store at 1087 Clay street, corner Twelfth street. It is the finest store of its kind in Oakland and as fine as any on the Pacific coast. The Clarkes have extensive greenhouses at Fruitvale, where for the last ten years they have been growing cut flowers for their large retail store in Portland, Ore., and for the wholesale trade in San Francisco. On their opening day, Saturday, April 27, they gave away over 20,000 carnations. Robert Newcomb, formerly of Chicago, but more recently with J. Seulerberger, of Oakland, has been engaged by the Clarkes for their new store.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is at the lowest ebb that the writer has experienced in the last forty years in San Francisco, with the possible exception of a few weeks immediately after the fire of last year. The street car strike, although it has only been in force for four days, put the finishing touches on what was already hopelessly bad. The retail business has come to such a condition that the retail stores have had several meetings at which the advisability of closing all the retail stores in certain sections of the town was advocated by the merchants. The advantages of this would be to save clerk hire and operating expenses until such time as things right themselves. As I write, the shrill voice of the newsboy in the street proclaims that already there has been bloodshed as a result of the strike.

Although only four days have elapsed, 7,000 men are idle and the end is not yet. Under such conditions it is hardly possible that a correspondent can report anything very favorable in his chosen field.

Although the towns across the bay, such as Oakland and Alameda, are to a certain extent removed from the seat of warfare, still the ill effects seem to influence all the bay towns and there is nothing to report except a fair amount of funeral business for the last week.

I am in hopes that by next week I will be able to report more favorably of the situation, but at the present writing I cannot truthfully say anything that in any way might convey the idea that we are short of being strictly "up against it."

Various Notes.

Henry J. Zimmer, of Chicago, is visiting friends in San Francisco. He will remain here for several weeks and proceed eastward by the way of Portland, Ore., and Seattle, Wash.

James Skinner, after having disposed of a carload of bay trees to the local trade, has removed his base of operations to Portland, Ore. Mr. Skinner will make a trip to Alaska during the summer, to inspect some claims he has in that part of the world.

The Alameda retailers report heavy demands for all kinds of hardy annuals. The supply in that section is apparently not equal to the calls of the gardening public.

Domoto Bros., of Elmhurst, will erect four more rose houses during the coming summer. They have at present one of the largest and most complete plants on the coast.

E. Gill, of Oakland and West Berkeley, has planted forty acres in roses for the coming season's trade. This firm handled over a quarter of a million two-year-old budded stock during the last season.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Current Comment.

Trade conditions during April, while satisfactory, were not conducive to great enthusiasm, so we looked wise and made the best of it. The present month greeted us with more promising indications and is taxing our efforts to a finish. It is with pride that we refer to the superior quality of stock in general grown in Portland in the last few weeks. The display of Bride, Bridesmaid, Kaiserin and Richmond roses, perfectly formed, with stems three feet in length, we are sure cannot be excelled anywhere. The carnation family can also boast of fine physical development, in White Lawson, Lawson and Enchantress, and are more popular with the public. Late outdoor tulips and poet's narcissi, lingering reminders of spring, are filling their places in the market and we dispose of many of them at a moderate price. There is an abundance of everything, and anyone earning over $1.50 a day can have a bouquet for the Sunday table.

The plantmen are now in their glory, this being the height of the bedding season. That oft-repeated phrase, "Sales far in advance of last year," still holds good, and why should it not be so when growth and activity are noted in every direction? More beautiful weather could not be asked for. Vegetation is displaying all her spring charms in full leaf and blossom, and open air competition for the florist has begun.

Our customers take pride in inviting us to inspect their achievements in horticulture, and we have a large number of beautifully kept places in Portland. While the roses are rapidly forming bud, the magnolia, snowball, wistaria and tree peony are now seen at their best. But even this in our estimation cannot out-rival the natural charm of the "Heights," where we often go for recreation and inspiration. Scattered among the tall firs are the dogwood, lilac and horse chestnut, forming a pleasing contrast to the rich green foliage, while in the far distance the snow-capped mountains loom up like huge dishes of ice cream. This elevated district is a much frequented place, and observation cars are run daily for the accommodation of all visitors.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSEYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THERE were two inches of snow at Geneva, N. Y., May 11.

THE wholesale nurserymen report a good inquiry for stock for fall trade.

MANY nurserymen are inquiring if the time has not arrived to make a general advance in prices.

THE demise of Eli A. Bronson, a pioneer nurseryman of Geneva, N. Y., is reported in the obituary column this week.

THE nurserymen at Geneva, N. Y., report the spring season as generally the best to date. They sold out closely on nearly all lines.

AT West Chester, Pa., it is said the rabbits did considerable damage to young stock in the nurseries during the last snowy period of the winter.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has just issued a bulletin of forty-eight freely illustrated pages descriptive of the insect and fungous enemies of the grape east of the Rocky mountains.

THE president of the American Association of Nurserymen has appointed a committee of nine well-known men to report at the Detroit meeting in June a plan for the standardizing of grades of nursery stock.

NELSON BOGUE, of Batavia, N. Y., has for some years been breeding Morgan horses, more as a hobby than for profit, but recently has made some good sales of thoroughbred stock to the owners of large private estates who have visited his nursery.

A. R. PICKETT will hereafter be associated with his father in the nursery business at Clyde, O. The new firm takes over the interests of the Highland Nursery and Orchard Co. and will be known as the Clyde Nursery, G. S. Pickett & Son, proprietors.

NINETY-FIVE per cent of the creditors in the bankruptcy case of the Hart Pioneer Nurseries, Fort Scott, Kan., petitioned Referee Cory, April 25, to sell the remaining stock of the nurseries, and it was so ordered. An offer of $500 on the remaining nursery stock and a few wagons was made and will likely be accepted by Trustee Dan Campbell. Previous sales have amounted to about $2,500. The liabilities in this suit reached $40,000.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

The work of planting many deciduous trees may, with perfect safety, be prolonged after the leaves begin to unfold, if facilities for the immediate watering of the trees are available. Maples are especially tractable in this respect and no fear need be entertained regarding their successful establishment if the above mentioned requirement has been timely applied.

Early in summer is a good time to saw off branches that are either super-

Dreer's Hardy Perennial Phlox.

We are the largest growers of Perennial Phlox in the world. Our collection is unequalled, and we are prepared to furnish the new and rare kinds as well as all the popular and standard varieties in large quantities. This stock is much superior to and must not be confounded with young Winter propagated stock such as is generally sent out in the Spring of the year.

If there occurs an interval of comparative quiet between the rush of planting deciduous trees and that of evergreens, it ought, as far as possible, to be taken advantage of in the way of transplanting those of the former remaining unsold in the nursery rows. The labor thus devoted could hardly be applied to a better purpose.

Seedlings and cuttings kept right along under glass cover should be well hardened before being set out in the nursery rows.

Weeds are a plague to nurserymen, especially in wet seasons. It will help greatly to keep these down if the war of extermination is begun early and persistently waged during every dry day.

This persistent killing of weeds, or the cultivation of the soil for their prevention, is not only good for that special purpose, but is also serviceable in its help to the trees in the nursery.

There is no doubt that moving oaks is usually attended with some degree of danger, especially if the trees are large, but if those trees had been as frequently transplanted as is commonly the case with others requiring the precaution less, the danger would be reduced to a minimum. The moving of a large oak should never be attempted until at least a year has elapsed since the roots were cut at a suitable distance from the trunk of the tree. This is a good method to adopt with all trees on which the eye of the mover has been cast.

The pin oak, Quercus palustris, is one of the handsomest of all the oaks. The leaves at the time of opening are a beautiful green, changing gradually to a darker hue until in autumn it assumes tints of brilliant red. In shape this oak is broad and massive, with a pyramidal crown.

The English oak, Quercus robur, is another beautiful tree, with dilated leaves, bluish green underneath and paler green above, changing late in the season to speckled brown.

The willow oak, Quercus phellos, is a peculiar and graceful tree, with lanceolate leaves resembling greatly those of a willow. The leaves turn yellow in the fall.

The red oak, Quercus rubra, makes a large, symmetrical specimen tree. The leaves are large and divided into bristly

REFORESTING.

With the end in view of eventually bringing about the reforestation of the pine barrens of upper Michigan, the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co., of Negaunee, is carrying on, at considerable expenditure, extensive experiments of much public interest. It has established two nurseries at which pine trees are being raised from seed. These are at Negaunee and Coalwood, and at each one the plan has to date been attended with entire success. White pine grown from seed are ready for transplanting two years after sprouting. Ninety thousand of these are ready for this purpose now, and they are being set out on cut-over lands near Coalwood this spring, the pioneers of a future forest. A considerable quantity of seed was planted last year. More will go into the ground this spring, including fifty pounds received a few days ago from Denmark, and this process will be repeated annually for an indefinite period of time. Forty years, it is estimated, are required for a white pine tree to attain such size as to make it profitable to market for use in the manufacture of lumber.

The Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. has a considerable horticultural establishment, including greenhouses.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE GRAPE.

After the selection of the parent vines is made, and having them planted in the same or neighboring vineyards, we are ready for the next step.

Selection of Qualities.

But before we take this step we must have some definite ideal, which we are trying to secure, whether it be a fine black grape that will grow in the black lands or sandy soils, or whether it be one of extraordinary high color and appearance, and at the same time be adapted, or whether it be for an extra early grape for the market.

Suppose the ideal grape desired is an extra early market grape of red color, the popular color for the fancy trade, that will succeed in the greatest variety of soils, atmospheric and climatic conditions. The parentage then selected must contain earliness, size, red color, productivity, persistent berries, noncracking skin, good eating quality, resistance to sudden and severe changes of temperature and long continued cold and heat, moisture and drouth; resistance to fungus and insect diseases, and must have long life.

As to begin with, one or even two varieties can be found containing all these qualifications, we must manage to combine them from two or three or perhaps a dozen different varieties and species of grapes, to be used as parents, requiring as many generations, and in each generation we may have to produce hundreds of thousands of distinct seedling combinations before we can get one we deem a sufficient advance toward the ideal to be used as a parent in the direct line to the ideal final product.

Each generation, if our knowledge and judgment have been good, will furnish some individuals with more of the desired qualities than the previous generation, and thus are used as parents for further breeding. Even if we do not reach the ideal in the first, second or many subsequent generations, these generations will furnish improvements over the old, so we can be using them in a commercial way, while we are still striving to get to the ideal.

How Munson Worked.

As an instance, to get the early red market grape suited for the south I will illustrate by example, from my home place, in which my father has partially brought about the ideal, it has not yet been produced, for enough time has not elapsed, but it can be said that it is an improvement by breeding.

First the Lindley was used as the mother and the Delaware as the pollen parent. Among the crosses obtained was the Brilliant, a vigorous, healthy vine less subject to root rot than Concord, not so resistant to severe cold, but more enduring in the hot, dry, drouthy climate of Texas; subject to mildew in foliage as are both parents, and like them quite exempt from black rot. The cluster and berry are rather larger than its mother, the Lindley, though the cluster and berry when the variety first bore resembled the Delaware, and it ripens several days ahead of its parents, both the Lindley and Delaware. The quality is superb and generally preferred as an eating grape to the Delaware.

Current Comment.

During the last week we have experienced unseasonable weather. It has been so cold that no bedding out has been attempted, and as soon as the weather warms up all can look for a busy and rushing time. Cut flowers have been rather scarce.

The last meeting of the State Florists' Society was held at Henry Rieman's place. Those present report a pleasant time. The subjects discussed were the fall show and the picnic. The latter will be held about June 26, at Willowmere, on the invitation of Frank Harritt.

The Tomlinson Hall Market was well supplied, May 12, with all kinds of bedding plants. There were some fine Richard geraniums to be seen. This variety is one of the main bedders in this city.

E. A. Nelson has secured the contract for this year at Woodruff place. It is one of the largest bedding orders in the city. S.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

The Tri-City Florists' Association met with Henry Meyer May 9. It was the regular monthly meeting of the association. Plans are being made for the annual picnic which will take place Thursday, July 11. The place has not yet been definitely decided upon, but the picnic will probably be held at Black Hawk's watch tower. A committee consisting of H. Bryant, John Staack, and Henry Gaethje will make the arrangements.

The topic which was taken up was "Peony Culture; the Best Varieties for Cut Flowers." Mr. Bryant led the discussion. Mr. Bryant's father, at Princeton, Ill., is one of the largest peony growers in the state. John Temple also gave an interesting talk on the subject. After the business session a social time was enjoyed and a luncheon served by the host.

The next regular meeting will be held with Ewoldt Bros. at Floral Hill, North Brady street. It is the custom to meet annually with the Ewoldts during the strawberry season. The next monthly meeting would regularly come on June 13, but it will probably not be held until a week later, on account of the tardiness of the strawberry season this year.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

A regular and well attended meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at the Oriental hotel May 8. Four new members were elected and there were two propositions for membership. The display of flowers by the members was fine. Alexander Mackenzie had an elegant showing of Richmond roses. Valentine Cleres showed American Beauties. Henry Matz and Felix Mense showed carnations.

The essay of the evening was by J. F. Johnson, "What Is the Best Time to Plant Evergreens?" The paper was followed by some spirited discussion and also by a question box, which brought out some interesting and pertinent queries.

Announcement was made of some additional premium offers for the fall exhibition. Mrs. Paul Dana has promised $20 worth of books and Mr. Rickards, of New York, will give $10. William H. Bowne has offered a prize of $5 for the best showing of dahlias, the prize to be competed for at the October meeting.

DUBUQUE, IA.—W. A. Harkett recently addressed the Young Woman's Christian Association on "Home Gardening and the Care of Cut Flowers." The local papers printed a considerable part of his talk and the result was a good impetus to trade.

COFFEYVILLE, KAN.—The Forest Park Floral Co. has a growing business and has two new greenhouses now in process of construction. Including the new houses, this establishment covers about 4,000 square feet of ground surface.

The Market.

After passing through another disagreeable week, business has dropped off a little; weather conditions are every way but seasonable. Work of all kinds is booked, but we are unable to check it off and at present there is little prospect of doing so. We have had several frosts lately, and this is unusual here at this time of the year. On an average the last killing frost strikes here about April 15, but May 11, 1907, we had a frost which played havoc in the farming sections. The florists also were heavy losers.

Any quantity of cut flowers can be had at reasonable figures. The street boys are doing a rushing business. Lilacs are in, but short in supply. Honeysuckle seems to be a little more plentiful. Greens of all kinds are more regular.

Various Notes.

While he was attending market on a recent Saturday the home of T. W. Gray, Catonsville, Md., was robbed. A gold watch and chain, some money and various other articles are reported missing.

Charles Cook has been receiving congratulations from his many friends on the arrival, May 7, of a bouncing baby girl.

The pea, bean and strawberry crops in Anne Arundel county are in a satisfactory condition and picking will soon start.

Aug. Eberhardt is still cutting some fine Enchantress carnations and offering a nice lot of well rooted asters in 2-inch pots.

John P. Willheim, Gardenville, Md., was seen the other day in town with a new rubber-tired buggy and driving a young, spirited colt.

Among those who have taken up the idea of handling flower seeds in packages in the market are Mrs. James Glass, Mrs. Emma Hahn and Mrs. F. Powell, and they report trade on them as satisfactory.

EVERYBODY TALKS ABOUT IT ! LIKE THE BEE A Prosperous Florist Is Never Idle.....

An Immense Stock of Bedding Plants Now Ready

The Bee is the first that takes advantage of the Great Work that Godfrey Aschmann, the never resting florist, with the assistance of his three grown-up, wide-a-wake sons, John, Edward and Howard, and together with his faithful employees, have done since Easter. Just think! Everything nearly empty at Easter and now, now, look now, only four weeks have elapsed and such an immense stock ready to put on the market. Can it be possible? No wonder the bees enjoy their lives in Aschmann's greenhouses. Just look how they are swarming. "Oh, Aschmann's flowers taste so sweet," the bees say. "We cannot stop; we have a big field to work on; 100,000 of the choicest plants; every nook and corner full; let us harvest." Secure Bargains now and for Decoration Day.

The Market.

The cold weather continues, with the result of maintaining the same good, steady trade that we have had for the last two months. While there has not been any rush, even with the seedsmen, still the long spring business will result at the end in very favorable totals for all. What is now very much helping our florists is the fact that the unseasonable cold weather has so far kept the best trade from leaving the city for the summer; for the moment the settled heat comes, "society" begins to go, and the beginning of the "summer dullness" sets in.

All stock is in good supply except carnations, which are still hard to obtain in sufficient quantity to amply supply all the demands. Roses are especially fine this week, some long-stemmed Chatenay and Richmond being particularly in demand. Some fine lots of white and extra early Blanche Ferry sweet peas have been the feature of the week, and at the popular price of 25 cents a bunch have found ready sale. The wonderfully long season that the landscape and nurserymen are having insures a very large business in these lines.

Various Notes.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club, May 14, the club's prizes of $5, $3 and $2 were awarded to the winners in the "point system" contest, for plants and flowers that have been exhibited at our meetings during the past winter season.

Madison Miesse, of Lancaster, was recently in town, and announces that he has secured the services of Fred Windmiller, who for several seasons had charge of the greenhouse plant of the Livingston Seed Co. Recently Mr. Windmiller has been with the Cleveland Cut Flower Co.

The closing of Green Lawn cemetery to Sunday burials, which plan went into effect last Sunday, has resulted in making our florists busier on Friday, as many more funerals are now being held on Saturdays, especially late in the afternoon.

The Livingston Seed Co. is holding its annual sale of magnolia trees. These are a special feature with this firm, which disposes of them in all the best varieties in large quantities.

The official seal of Ohio, made from thirty varieties of seeds, all of which were grown in the Buckeye state, has been installed as a part of the state's display at the Jamestown Exposition. So perfect in workmanship is it that it appears to be painted.

William Graff, of Graff Bros., has returned from a ten days' trip to Chicago, and his firm is reaping some of the results of his visit, in an American Beauty rose sale. Graff Bros. make a specialty of these popular sales, working off large quantities of stock.

John Williams has adopted a unique and popular idea in the selling of his tomato plants. He transplants dozens and twenty-five plants into 3-inch and 7-inch bulb pans, and they sell readily.

M. B. Faxon has been invited to address the teachers and scholars of the public schools on the children's garden-

LENOX, MASS.

The regular meeting of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held Saturday, May 4, with President Heeremans in the chair.

Thomas Proctor was awarded a first-class certificate of merit for two fine plants of Rehmannia angulata, grown and shown for the first time in Lenox. This beautiful, half hardy, herbaceous perennial comes from central China. It is free flowering. The flowers, borne up the stem, are rosy purple, about three inches in diameter, and have a rich yellow throat, dotted with purple. The individual blooms are large, striking and showy. Seed sown early in the year will flower the same year. This is a welcome addition for conservatory use.

Mr. Proctor was also awarded two certificates of cultural commendation for two well grown plants of Schizanthus Wisetonensis in 10-inch pots and Phlox divaricata in 10-inch pans.

The next meeting will be held Saturday, May 18, when important business will be brought up before the society.

ROSWELL, N. M.

The weather during February and March was unusually warm, but took a sudden change April 20, when we had a big snow storm and a hard freeze on top of it, which killed a lot of advanced flowering plants. Since then the weather has been cold and windy.

May 9 we had a wet hail storm that lasted for sixteen minutes, but did not do much damage to glass, as the stones were small. All kinds of outdoor plants, however, suffered greatly. Flowering plants that were to come in for Decoration day are no more to be seen.

The Market.

The weather still is anything but spring-like. May 10 we had quite a snow-fall, followed by a heavy frost.

Business seems to come in spurts, probably because the most of it is for funerals. To say that the market remains well cleaned up is hardly putting it strong enough. Saturday and Sunday flowers were so scarce that one of the commission houses borrowed one dozen sweet peas from a retailer. Roses sell at from 3 cents to 8 cents and are of fine quality. Carnations are of an exceptionally good quality, and although the cut seems to be heavy, they are in such demand that one seldom sees any at the local commission houses one hour after the arrival of a shipment. Sweet peas are also of good quality and sell readily at from 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred. Violets are on their last legs. Bulbous stock still holds on, but is nothing extra. Smilax is a little more plentiful. Southern ferns are about the best on the market at present.

Various Notes.

The ice peddlers' strike was of short duration. The dealers agreed to give all the men a raise of $1 a week. This means $16 during the winter and $18.50 during the summer months.

Gus. H. Taepke has purchased the piece of land occupied by him for so many years on Elmwood avenue, also the strip along Hunt street. It is understood that the old houses are to give way to new, modern houses this summer.

Beard Bros. are cutting some of the finest carnations in this vicinity.

The Lohrman Seed Co. has gone quite extensively into the tree spraying business. This firm has three or four wagons rigged up with a spraying apparatus, the pressure being derived from the regular soda fountain air-pressure tanks. H. S.

STERLING, ILL.—The Sterling Floral Co. has planted a bed of pansies 7x120 feet along the east side of its new carnation house.

PETERBORO, ONT.—Jordan Bros. recently made a shipment of 275 carnation plants to a florist at Adelaide, South Australia. They will be six weeks on the way.

PULVERIZED SHEEP MANURE

One of the most effective of fertilizers and largely used by the best growers, both as a top dressing and in the manure tanks. The raw material for Hunt's Sheep Manure is the droppings taken from solid floor sheep corrals. Ordinary manures are largely shoveled up from the ground and contain a large proportion of soil for which you pay, but from which you get nothing except possibly weed seed. A trial order will convince the most skeptical of the superiority of our brand.

The Market.

The weather still is anything but spring-like. May 16 we had quite a snow-fall, followed by a heavy frost.

Business seems to come in spurts, probably because the most of it is for funerals. To say that the market remains well cleaned up is hardly putting it strong enough. Saturday and Sunday flowers were so scarce that one of the commission houses borrowed one dozen sweet peas from a retailer. Roses sell at from 3 cents to 8 cents and are of fine quality. Carnations are of an exceptionally good quality, and although the cut seems to be heavy, they are in such demand that one seldom sees any at the local commission houses one hour after the arrival of a shipment. Sweet peas are also of good quality and sell readily at from 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred. Violets are on their last legs. Bulbous stock still holds on, but is nothing extra. Smilax is a little more plentiful. Southern ferns are about the best on the market at present.

Various Notes.

The ice peddlers' strike was of short duration. The dealers agreed to give all the men a raise of $1 a week. This means $16 during the winter and $18.50 during the summer months.

Gus. H. Taepke has purchased the piece of land occupied by him for so many years on Elmwood avenue, also the strip along Hunt street. It is understood that the old houses are to give way to new, modern houses this summer.

Beard Bros. are cutting some of the finest carnations in this vicinity.

The Lohrman Seed Co. has gone quite extensively into the tree spraying business. This firm has three or four wagons rigged up with a spraying apparatus, the pressure being derived from the regular soda fountain air-pressure tanks. H. S.

STERLING, ILL. The Sterling Floral Co. has planted a bed of pansies 7x120 feet along the east side of its new carnation house.

PETERBORO, ONT. Jordan Bros. recently made a shipment of 275 carnation plants to a florist at Adelaide, South Australia. They will be six weeks on the way.

Greenhouse Heating.

INSUFFICIENT RADIATION.

I have two parallel greenhouses, heated with hot water. They have 4-foot walls and measure ten feet to the ridge. They are double boarded with matched lumber, with two thicknesses of tar paper between. In House No. 1, which is 16x60 feet, the main leaves the boiler in a 3½-inch pipe and then divides into two 2½-inch flows, each of which feeds five 2-inch return pipes. House No. 2 is 16x53 feet, with an ell 15x30 at the far end. In this house the 3½-inch main, after leaving the boiler, is divided into two 3-inch flow pipes, each feeding five 2-inch returns. All pipes have an up and down grade of one inch to ten feet, and have a direct drop of twenty inches where they enter the boiler. All flows are overhead. I have in use a No. 624 Burnham hot-water boiler, with six sections and a grate surface 24x30 inches. I burn soft coal. House No. 2 has glass in the gables. I wish to maintain a temperature of 55 to 60 degrees. Is the boiler large enough to do this without forcing it?

The dimensions as you have recorded them are not sufficient to enable me to give an accurate estimate of your plant. It is evident, however, that the piping is insufficient to maintain even a temperature of 60 degrees. The radiation should be 1,000 square feet for a temperature of 60 degrees, and it is evident that there is less than 900 square feet of radiation in the houses. If your boiler has a rated capacity of 1,500 square feet it is large enough to handle the plant without forcing.

WRONG INSTALLATION.

I have an east and west greenhouse, 14x40 feet, heated by a Wilks hot water heater. There are three benches, with three 1½-inch flow pipes under each side bench and four under the middle bench. There is one 1½-inch return pipe under each bench. The boiler is about two feet lower than the pipes, which gradually rise about fifteen inches. The expansion tank is at the highest point. This arrangement did not prove entirely satisfactory. It was hard work to keep the heat up on extremely cold or windy days. What change would you suggest, using the 1½-inch pipe? I am planning to build a 10-foot lean-to and wish to use 4-inch pipe. How should it be arranged?

E. W. G.

If I read the description of your heating plant correctly, it is little wonder you have difficulty in maintaining heat in the house. It is installed wrong end to; that is, you have too many flow pipes and too few and too small returns. If you will rearrange the heating plant by carrying one 2-inch pipe from the boiler under the ridge to the far end of the house, there divide it to supply three coils of 1½-inch pipe of four pipes each under each of the three benches, and then reunite these near the boiler into a common 2-inch return, you will have the plant right end to and sufficient for a temperature of 60 degrees. Connect the expansion tank by a ¾-inch pipe to the main return within a foot of the boiler and carry it six to ten feet above the

PIPING FOR CARNATIONS.

I have a greenhouse 30x44 feet, ten feet to the ridge, with 5-foot walls of double, ship-lap siding; no glass in sides. I have one 2-inch flow pipe and ten 1-inch returns to the furnace, with seventy feet of coil in the furnace to heat the water, and a 10-inch flue direct from the furnace to the far end of the house and out. Now, I would like to take out the flue. How much more 1-inch pipe will I need to heat the building for carnations, geraniums, etc., and how many flows of 2-inch pipe will I need? I have heated the building for ten years with the flue and ten 1-inch pipes, but I want to grow carnations on a bench over the flue and that would make the have seen the temperature down at 20 degrees below zero, but for the last two years about 10 to 12 degrees was the lowest. E. P.

While I confess it does not look consistent with what you state you have been doing with your house, yet to heat it to 60 degrees the house should be provided with two 2-inch flow pipes and thirty 1-inch returns, fifteen supplied from each return. I believe I would give the carnations a season's trial before modifying the heating plant.

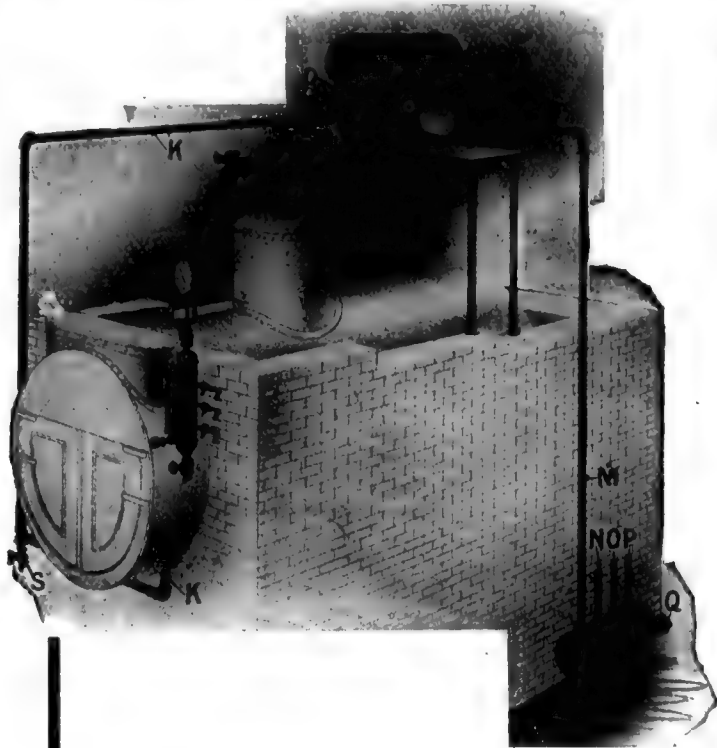

L. C. C.

INSUFFICIENT BOILER CAPACITY.

We have one small house, 30x70 feet, with four feet of side glass and the ridge at a height of thirteen feet. It is heated at present by a Wilks hot-water heater, 30x48 inches, made to heat 750 feet of radiation. Our piping consists of three 3-inch mains, with twelve 1½-inch returns, one coil in the center and one on each side; four pipes to a coil. We are splendidly protected by trees, etc., and when the thermometer registered 38 degrees below zero we held the temperature at 52 degrees, though we thus used an immense quantity of fuel. This year we wish to build a vegetable house, 16x50 feet, with a 2½-foot basement and a low roof. No side glass. This will be at right angles to the other house, and the boiler-room is so arranged as to open into both houses. Will our present boiler handle both houses? How much pipe should there be in each house—one house for a temperature of 60 degrees with an outside temperature of 20 degrees below zero, the other house for vegetables? We could probably get a good, cheap second-hand steam boiler here. Would it pay to change to steam heat? A. K. W.

The boiler in question is not quite large enough to carry the present house, 30x70 feet, at 65 degrees. The piping is not quite sufficient for this temperature. Sixteen 1½-inch returns, with the three 3-inch flow pipes, would make the heating of the house easier. The proposed house, 16x50 feet, can be heated by using one 2½-inch flow pipe and twelve 1½-inch returns. An additional boiler with 750 square feet of heating capacity should be added, however. You would not be justified in changing to steam. You could save a little on piping, but more care in firing would be necessary. Stick to hot water. L. C. C.

It is installed wrong end to that is, you have too many flow pipes and too few and too small returns. If you will rearrange the heating plant by carrying one 2-inch pipe from the boiler under the ridge to the far end of the house, there divide it to supply three coils of 1½-inch pipe of four pipes each under each of the three benches, and then reunite these near the boiler into a common 2-inch return, you will have the plant right end to and sufficient for a temperature of 60 degrees. Connect the expansion tank by a ¾-inch pipe to the main return within a foot of the boiler and carry it six to ten feet above the

PIPING FOR CARNATIONS.

I have a greenhouse 30x44 feet, ten feet to the ridge, with 5-foot walls of double, ship-lap siding; no glass in sides. I have one 2-inch flow pipe and ten 1-inch returns to the furnace, with seventy feet of coil in the furnace to heat the water, and a 10-inch flue direct from the furnace to the far end of the house and out. Now, I would like to take out the flue. How much more 1-inch pipe will I need to heat the building for carnations, geraniums, etc., and how many flows of 2-inch pipe will I need? I have heated the building for ten years with the flue and ten 1-inch pipes, but I want to grow carnations on a bench over the flue and that would make the

have seen the temperature down at 20 degrees below zero, but for the last two years about 10 to 12 degrees was the lowest. E. P.

While I confess it does not look consistent with what you state you have been doing with your house, yet to heat it to 60 degrees the house should be provided with two 2-inch flow pipes and thirty 1-inch returns, fifteen supplied from each return. I believe I would give the carnations a season's trial before modifying the heating plant.

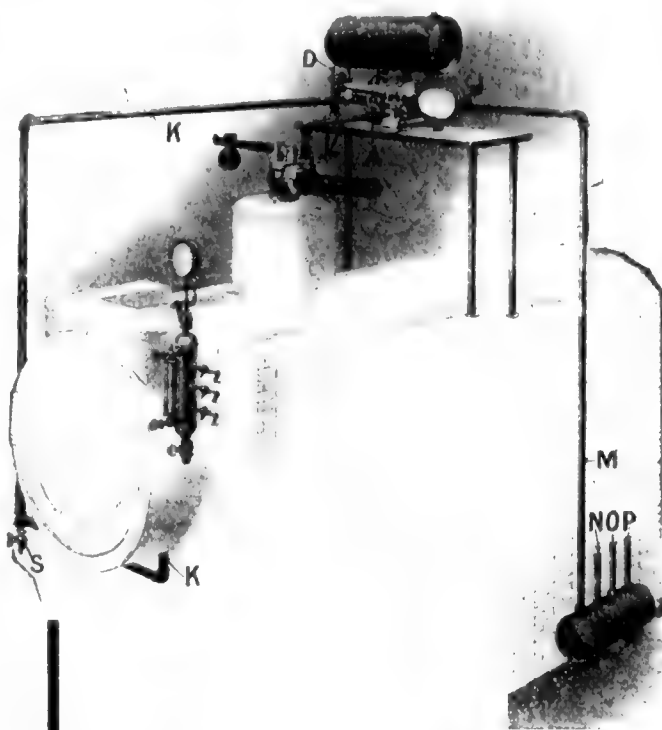

L. C. C.

INSUFFICIENT BOILER CAPACITY.

We have one small house, 30x70 feet, with four feet of side glass and the ridge at a height of thirteen feet. It is heated at present by a Wilks hot-water heater, 30x48 inches, made to heat 750 feet of radiation. Our piping consists of three 3-inch mains, with twelve 1½-inch returns, one coil in the center and one on each side; four pipes to a coil. We are splendidly protected by trees, etc., and when the thermometer registered 38 degrees below zero we held the temperature at 52 degrees, though we thus used an immense quantity of fuel. This year we wish to build a vegetable house, 16x50 feet, with a 2½-foot basement and a low roof. No side glass. This will be at right angles to the other house, and the boiler-room is so arranged as to open into both houses. Will our present boiler handle both houses? How much pipe should there be in each house—one house for a temperature of 60 degrees with an outside temperature of 20 degrees below zero, the other house for vegetables? We could probably get a good, cheap second-hand steam boiler here. Would it pay to change to steam heat? A. K. W.

The boiler in question is not quite large enough to carry the present house, 30x70 feet, at 65 degrees. The piping is not quite sufficient for this temperature. Sixteen 1½-inch returns, with the three 3-inch flow pipes, would make the heating of the house easier. The proposed house, 16x50 feet, can be heated by using one 2½-inch flow pipe and twelve 1½-inch returns. An additional boiler with 750 square feet of heating capacity should be added, however. You would not be justified in changing to steam. You could save a little on piping, but more care in firing would be necessary. Stick to hot water. L. C. C.

PINE BLUFF, ARK.

On May 6 we had one of the most severe hail storms this country ever experienced. A. A. Harper's houses are a total wreck. The loss on houses and plants was $400; there was no insurance. Mrs. C. A. Starr lost about the same amount; N. F. Penny, market gardener, lost 1,800 feet of glass. Hail or chunks of ice over three inches in diameter and weighing seven ounces were picked up. Gardens and orchards are all cut and beat up till they are ruined. As the spring is very late, all the greenhouses were full of bedding stock; so the loss is great. Owing to the mildness of the winter the cut flower trade was bad, as so many people cut flowers outdoors all winter. The lowest temperature we had last winter was 27 degrees, something unusual for this climate. H.

The Market.

Snow, rain and ice in the middle of May are not conducive to good business, and all of these we had last week. Greenhouse men usually are cleaned up by Decoration day, but up to this time have not been able to deliver anything and are wondering how they will be able to handle the stock quick enough to satisfy their customers when the weather settles. Vegetation was farther advanced in March than ever was known, but now the middle of May finds it farther back than the oldest inhabitant can remember at this season. The warm March brought shrubbery into leaf and the cold since has killed much of it. In many places deutzia, weigelia and stock of that kind has been killed to the ground and herbaceous stock has suffered in the same way. One of our prominent gardeners says that there was more stock killed this year than any other year in his recollection, and most of it since April 11. The continued rains have kept the farmer back in his work of getting in spring crops. In some cases oats are not yet planted.

Among the cut flower growers stock becomes more plentiful every day. There is nothing short and many things are a drug, especially sweet peas. Some of the retailers still complain about business, but they seem to be busy enough and I imagine it has just gotten to be a habit.

Club Meeting.

At the club meeting May 7 bedding plants were exhibited by I. S. Crall Co., of Monongahela, Pa., and by Blind Bros. The discussion of varieties brought out the fact that one successful grower grew only three varieties of geraniums, one red, one white and one pink, and the best variety of each color. He grows these well and, while he has a large business, never has any trouble satisfying his customers and always sells out at top prices.

A paper on credits was read by T. P. Langhans, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., in which he called attention to the loose manner in which florists as a rule conduct their business affairs, many of them having only one object: to dispose of their stock, without taking proper care of how they are going to get their money. He also called attention to the way florists let a beat go the rounds and stick everybody before he is found out, and suggested an association such as they have in other trades where competition is greater than ours, showing by figures how their losses had been reduced sixty-five per cent. He also censured the trade for carelessness in making collections, allowing accounts to stand for fear of offending customers, while the florist ruined his own credit because he could not pay his bills.

The paper was well written and caused considerable comment. John Bader, in commenting on it, said the conclusion he had come to was, "get your money or keep your stock"; that he is tired of the class who are traveling around buying here and there and underselling the men they buy from because they do not pay.

There will be several papers read at the next meeting.

SOME COLD FACTS ON A HOT SUBJECT

We have something to tell you about boilers—something so reasonable, so chuck full of common sense that you can't afford not to give it consideration. What we have to say is printed up in this small catalog, and arranged so the hurry man can get at the meat instantly. Drop us a postal and along will come the "Cold Facts."

THE SUCCESSFUL GROWER IS THE MAN

who looks ahead. He starts right by building houses that will produce results—houses that will stand the test when it comes to growing. Our customers are successful because they use the right kind of material—you can't hope to grow the right kind of stock with the wrong kind of a house. Here's a line from the most successful growers in America—you all know them—it's not a statement written by someone you never heard of:

"GENTLEMEN—During the past four years we have added 375,000 sq. ft. of glass for which you supplied the material. It affords us great pleasure to say that all the material and workmanship was highly satisfactory."

We have something to tell you about boilers—something so reasonable, so chuck full of common sense that you can't afford not to give it consideration. What we have to say is printed up in this small catalog, and arranged so the hurry man can get at the meat instantly. Drop us a postal and along will come the "Cold Facts."

THE SUCCESSFUL GROWER IS THE MAN

who looks ahead. He starts right
by building houses that will produce results—houses that will stand the test when it comes to growing. Our customers are successful because they use the right kind of material—you can't hope to grow the right kind of stock with the wrong kind of a house. Here's a line from the most successful growers in America—you all know them—it's not a statement written by someone you never heard of:

"GENTLEMEN—During the past four years we have added 375,000 sq. ft. of glass for which you supplied the material. It affords us great pleasure to say that all the

Now, When You Received that Other Estimate from the Other Chap that You Thought would be so Much Lower than Ours, did His Price Include Priming the Material?

Did he say how he primed the material? We have told you every once-in-a-while the way we do this painting business; how cypress absorbs more oil than most woods, and that a mere brushed-on prime coat cannot be as lasting as our "soaked in" method. This soaked in method is simply placing the materials right in a vat of pure oil and oxide of iron, where they actually do soak. Then they are stood up to drip. The wood takes all the oil it needs; when you put on your second coat, the wood does not absorb the oil, leaving the pigment ready to chalk off. Next week we are going to tell you something about a special white lead that we make, that prevents mildew or blisters.

Don't believe for a minute that the "hardware man's," or any other man's paint will do for a greenhouse. It must be a greenhouse paint made for greenhouses, that is, if you don't want mildew or blisters.
